Berberizes, among other things, words, and the umbrella[5]...; and when Koranic laws apply to him, he follows them only if they are complimentary to his own custom; but, if there is a contradiction, it is custom, and not the Shari'a, which is followed, and followed without question.[6]

5) The author's expression of his personal sympathy for the Rifians: men who are "brave, loyal, hard-working, intelligent, modest, honorable, (long-)suffering, and austere."[7]

B) Introduction to Social Structure (fragmentary):

1) As an agricultural and warlike people, the social ties of the Rifians are rudimentary[8] and become weaker as the number of individuals associated with them increase: thus, from family to tribe, from village to region, there is a decrease in consistency. Strong in "elemental" groupings like the agnatic lineage or the dharfiqth, which units its members through blood ties[9], they lose rigidity although they are still precise and detailed in the jma'th (or local community)[10], and they become looser and more difficult to recognize in the upper-level groups, the dhaqbitsh[11] and its "fractions"[12], which nevertheless constitute the true "homeland" in North Africa, and are independent units[13].

2) The Rifian social organisms (i.e. units) are constituted by the associations between family (i.e. kin) groups which live together in the same territory, and thus have a localistic stamp which permits their evaluation in this manner. However, the institutions which constitute political groups do not have this character, as they are made up of elastic and complementary forms[14] which...retain

602 571 613 619 596

2) (The author's) concept of "groups": a) group of blood ties (i.e. kin group)--family jajgu or "ascending ramus" (read "lineage branch")[20] and dharfiqth or "family group" (read "lineage"); b) social group--jma'ath: "fraction" or canton [21] (khums, rba')[22] and tribe or dhaqbitsh; c) political group--liff or alliance; d) religious group--tariqa or religious brotherhood, and murabitic families (saints); and e) economic group--rural lands and property: storehouses[23], markets, Jews, "beneficial institutions"[24].

594 596 613

Rifians are thus grouped into three "associations" (i.e. levels) of kin groups: 1) hearth or (nuclear) family or dhaddarth[25]; 2) "ascending ramus" or jajgu (lineage branch); and 3) "family group" or dharfiqth (patrilineage).

594

3) The Nuclear Family or Hearth:--This is formed by the union of a man, a woman and their (unmarried) children, and it should be looked at from both the conjugal and filial standpoints. From a

594 595 183 [554]

conjugal standpoint, it may be composed of a man and his four wives (and unmarried children). But Rifians are polygynous only in theory; in practice, only the well-to-do (such as shaikhs) are polygynous, and even they seldom have more than two wives. A poor man only tends to take a second wife if he has to, if, for example, he has divorced the first one for not bearing him any sons. The function of polygyny is to produce sons in order to prevent the extinction of the family in a society where the major law is "that of the strongest"[26], as well as to produce a sufficient number of male children to take care of agricultural tasks. "Oriental sensuality" is not a factor here, in any way.

562 428 [421] [361] Women are always considered as minors[52]. They have no property and do not, in practice, inherit. It would never even occur to a woman to ask for her portion of the inheritance; this is, indeed, very logical in a rural and bellicose society (whose settlement morphology consists of) dispersed dwellings, for otherwise it would 562 have been impossible to defend a woman against bold attacks. She can only take refuge in either her husband's house or that of her agnates. But women wear new clothes, sing, and dance, etc., at weddings, and at least they seem happy; and they are able to plague their husbands in many, many ways.

596 613 4) Jajgu (pl. ijujga--so-called in Aith Waryaghar; jij, pl. ijajjen, "wall-peg",--also, alliteratively, "penis"--in Aith 'Ammarth and Igzinnayen; and azwar, pl. isuran, "vein",--also, alliteratively, "penis" in the Eastern Rif):--This is the most difficult social unit to study, because of its intermediacy[53]. It is one of the "family branches"[54] (i.e. a branch of a dharfiqth or patri lineage). I 596 613 114 really cannot say more than this because informants, also, are unable to explain it properly. In my earliest notes, it appeared to me to be a uterine descent group (SIC!). If a man had agnatic descendants from three wives, he thus produced three "branches" of which he was the "trunk". I now (1935) believe this to be the case, but am not completely sure, for if a man who has only one wife has three sons, these also, as points of descent, form (the bases of) three ijujga. In any case, it is understood that branches or ijujga originate from each type (i.e. point of descent), but I feel that the more important category is that originating from a different mother; and, although

596 613 114 in her role in the family the wife does not count nor is her name perpetuated, there is no doubt that the blood-tie is different, as among our "brothers" and "half-brothers", and I therefore believe this interpretation to be correct.[55]

In any event, the jajgu is an important social grouping, as much in questions of succession, inheritance and collective responsibility as in the division of benefits, fines and communal property. These questions are simple enough for a Rifian in his own mind; and he thinks the question of what jajgu or jma'ath he belongs to such a simple one that he is astonished if the investigator asks him why. To this he does not readily give an explanation; furthermore, even if he (himself) wants to learn, he sees no benefit in teaching (others). He understands his own affairs up to the precise limit which is necessary for him in order to safeguard his own rights and interests. Beyond this point, he is not interested.[56]

596 613 If the jajgu head is incapable of representing his group properly, there is always someone whose courage or polemical attitude [623] may result in his being the spokesman. The headman of the jajgu is called aziddif or aziddjif (pl. iziddifen or iziddjifen,[57] literally "head"), and, with other such headmen, the jma'ath or council[58] of the elementary social unit is formed. These iziddjifen are thus the authentic representatives of the blood or kin groups which in Rifian are called dharfiqth (pl. dharfiqin), or "family group" (i.e. lineage).

613 5) Dharfiqth (pl. dharfiqin):---...When a Rifian says, "I am of the dharfiqth of so-and-so"[59], he means that so-and-so, in his own memory, is (usually) his most remote genealogical ascendant (on a step-by-step

613 basis). The dharfiqth is the fundamental unit in Rifian social organization, and it is erroneous to circumscribe it by defining it in terms of volume: so and so many houses, hearths or rifles.[60] The 613 623 dharfiqth, a kin group, is independent of the jma'ath, which is the association of dharfiqin or parts of them, and thus the elemental unit of the social (read "political") organization, the most distinctive feature of which, in my opinion, is lack of kinship, a point soon to be proven when we speak of the organization of the grouping called jma'ath.[61]

613 114 According to Robert Montagne in his Les Berberes et le Makhzen dans le Sud du Maroc, Paris 1930, p. 239, the Rifian dharfiqth is equivalent to the family (i.e. lineage) group called either ighs or ikhs, or "bone", in the Atlas. It contains a dozen houses, thirty or forty "hearths" (i.e. nubath), and is a group strong enough to defend itself. Its leaders call themselves amghar (pl. imgharen). Montagne says the word is derived etymologically from Arabic rafaqa, "a group or company of people", or that it may be a deformation of Arabic farqa (or fariqa), "division".[62] He thinks it possible to attribute the name "clan" to the unit which the Aith Waryaghar (and other Rifians) call dharfiqth because it is a larger and more durable family group than the ikhs of the Western High Atlas, while at the same time a kind of political unit, for it insures the fact that the blood tie exists between "hearths" of the same Rifian jma'ath.

My own opinion is that Montagne is in error here. Within the (623) dharfiqth, to be sure, there are indeed blood ties, but within the Rifian jma'ath there is no known kinship between its dharfiqin, for 613 a single dharfiqth may contribute to the formation of several jma'th-s.

614
623 even in different tribes. And thus the jma'th of Aith Waryaghar is an agglomeration of dharfiqin without known relationship to each other.[63]

623 The iziddjifen have well-defined functions within the above
613 groups (e.g. jajgu and dharfiqth), such as the distribution of work,
[596] payment and benefits (barley to the fqih, rations to the poor, reception of guests, fines, irrigation turns, participation in communal property, etc.), and formation of the opinion which their delegate to the outside world has to express, as well as support for him in the viewpoints he is to maintain. The iziddjifen, as representative of the dharfiqin, are the primordial element in the "play" of the jma'th.

562 D) Position of Women:
182 A Kabyle can do what he likes with his wife except make her
171 a corpse, while a Rifian considers her as precious coin in the cancellation of blood debts, and a Berber from the Atlas Mountains regards her as a precious offering in his request for an alliance[64], when the insecurity of the social grouping made it mandatory to look for friends to reinforce it.

562 The sad (Blanco's term) condition of women is most clearly
627 revealed in reprisal and in the norms which regulate it, such as 628 their devaluation, pre-Islamic in character (sic), revealed through the exemption from the act of vengeance of a husband who kills his wife;...North Africa is an area where women can be killed, and the blood-price (Arabic diya, Rifian ddiyith) is half that for a man.....

426 part of the bargain, he is reminded to do so by the chief, and if he 686 refuses, they forcibly commit a theft of animals or property, so
627 that his jma'th will hear of it; and they thus oblige him to fulfill 623 his promises or give rise to the intervention of his jma'th, which will force him to start negotiations.

685 The property of thieves is sold as indemnity, and, if they 627 have gone or if this cannot be done, that of their kinsmen is sold, a fine is imposed, and the eyes of the recalcitrant individual are plucked out by a member of his family if he is caught[68].

623 None of the decisions of the jma'th are registered.

F) Social Organization:

1) The jma'th has generally been defined in terms of what it is not. It has been likened to the Roman forum, the Greek agora, and the Scottish clan[69]; and it has been considered the "cornerstone" or the "roof" of the "Berber house". It has been characterized as an administrative unit by some, and as a social, judicial (i.e. jural), religious or military unit by others. Some have taken the number of houses as a base point, others the fact of whether or not it contains a Friday ("cantonal") mosque. The etymology of the word--"assembly, meeting, council, junta"--has also been invoked as a basis for definition, but this, by itself, is also insufficient[70].

623 In my view, the jma'th is the elemental form of the association
621 of neighboring family groups oriented toward essentially economic ends.
[613] The actual number of such groups, whether two today or two hundred tomorrow, and whether occupying thirty or two hundred households, is

623 immaterial; for a jma'th which formerly contained only two dharfiqin
613 may now have three, four or five, and tomorrow even more, with a
621 proportionate increase in houses and rifles. What the jma'th is not, however, is a family group united by blood ties--it is not a dharfiqth.

623 .....The jma'th came into being because of the necessity of common
182 usufruct of elements essential to sustain life, such as water, pasture
621 lands, brushwood, etc., and because of the necessity of regulating relations, both material and spiritual, with one's neighbors (hence mosques, which come into being after such an association has been effected). The result was that when a group for any reason abandoned its original jma'th in order to establish itself elsewhere--insofar as its growth and development made it do so, it cut off relationships with its parent group and its point of origin to constitute a new and independent nucleus[71].

621 Many Rifians confuse dharfiqth with jma'th, and proof of this 623 is that when one asks the members of a given group where they are
613 from, it is the same to them to answer "From such and such a jma'th"
[829] or "From such and such a dharfiqth", because the dharfiqth in question forms part of the jma'th whence they originated. Jma'th has a geographical connotation, while dharfiqth smells of nomadism (sic)[72]. This also explains why in different places one may find jma'th-s having the same name but formed by different dharfiqin, because over the course of time other splinter-groups from other jma'th-s became associated with the initial splinter-group from the first jma'th.....

621 I am dubious about the value of the number of households as a cri-
623 terion in definition; but I think that the best single datum available
501

621 today for finding out the volume of a social group is the list of 623 nubath or turns to provide food for the fqih. It is more constant
571 than an enumeration of houses or guns[73] or persons, which is more subject to variation. But it must also be remembered that there are two kinds of turns: those based on hearths, and those based on plows and animals to pull them. In some areas, one type is used, and in 621 others, the other.....The notion, however, of the Friday mosque as 623 a defining and anchoring characteristic of the jma'th is not bad, and 571 as such, it may be compared to the Spanish parish (parroqu'a)--but 794 only in the sense of members of different dharfiqin coming to prayer.
[613] This applies even if the mosque in question serves only as an individual place of prayer for a well-to-do family, and not as a common temple.[74]

623 The etymological definition of jma'th, "meeting, reunion, convocation" is in itself insufficient also, as it is too general.

2) Function of the Jma'th (understood again as council): Economic. It regulates services in common, i.e. use of water, pasture land, ghabth (brushwood) and communal lands, and, by extension, social relations (hospitality, benefits) and spiritual relations (funeral
623 services). Custom which is privately initiated in the kin group now
671 becomes public by acting as a yardstick in such relationships, and it is in the qanuns[75] of the jma'ths where the first rudiments of Rifian
[613] customary law appear. This law is both more elevated and more humane than that of the dharfiqth, which is purely one of reprisal.

621 In most jma'ths, industry and specialization is represented only
623 by a master blacksmith, aside from women who make pottery by hand;
463 on the other hand, in the "fraction" (clan or subclan) these 326 necessities are complemented.
323

In the tribes of Aith Waryaghar, Axt Tuzin, Thimsaman, Aith 'Ammarth, Ibuqquyen, Ktama and Sanhaja Srir, each clan has its own market[79]. Only in a small tribe or in one with more or less artificial clans is this not the case. The clan, which occupies a well determined area topographically, as a rule (a large meseta, valley, mountain fold, etc.), is a rare one which does not have or did not formerly have its own market, where the clan representatives or imqqranen came together to agree upon and proclaim their law, their rules of coexistence, which in some cases were drawn up on paper and which form the basis of my La Ley Rifeña, 2a Parte.

The clans of a tribe did not originate through accumulation of the association of jma'ths, but rather, the tribes which came to settle in the territory already contained three, four or five clans in their nomadic (sic) state, and the new lands were distributed equitably.[80] However, it is easier to follow the schematic representation of social groups from smaller to larger units, as the lineages characteristic of these are clearer and better defined. In the tribe, they are quite relaxed, and it is more difficult to see them, because the clans themselves are apt to show this by their patronymic designations, "sons of X"; but this opinion is provisional, as there are also names which are not genealogically based, as in the case of the clan names of Ibuqquyen (Izimmuren, Azghar and Thaghidhith) and in Ija'unen of Aith 'Ammarth; and the same might well be the case with the jma'ths, whose names are often geographical ones.[81]

In the clan, we have all the institutions, organisms, dependencies and economic specializations most necessary to sustain life: an amrabit or hermit saint venerated and besought for pilgrimages and miracles; a market for the provisions and supply and for the council

614 latter are an incommensurable force in which both the individual and/or
619 the group(s) to which he belongs may take refuge...Thus, if the clan
616 has a geographic character[83], its primary distinguishing features are its customary law, its qanuns and its market (as in the qanun of the Wednesday Market of Sidi Bu 'Afif, which marks the jurisdiction of this market and the men who admit the same and arrange their lives in accordance with it--see La Ley Rifeña, 2a Parte, pp. 59-68).

619 4) Tribe or Dhaqbitsh: The tribe is the highest-level form of 614 clan association (i.e. a tribe is made up by a given number of clans or maximal segments). The function of a tribe, also, has on this 619 level been transformed into that of maintaining interclan equilibrium
614 (i.e. the theory of segmental balance and opposition), which is
671 guided by the same norms as within each clan, and if it actually has 182 no overall customary law common to it as a single unit[84], it nonetheless forces...any of its delinquent members to rectify any errors, faults or mistakes he may make, but always in accordance with the law of his clan. Thus we may observe that, within the tribes, their clans 619 form two balanced and equilibrated lfuf (pl. of liff), or liffs, as 614 the tribes, on their own level, do in turn[85], and as even the dharfiqin
616 of a given jma'th do, two, three or four rungs down the ladder. It
613 would seem to be these liffs which have always served to watch over
621 and maintain the continued existence of the "fractions" and tribes,
623 while at the same time having been responsible for a fierce opposition to penetration of the area on the part of the Makhzin (both Moroccan and Spanish)...If the jma'th is the secondary school of Rifian democracy, the "fraction" is its high school and its tribe the university.

623 5) Councils and Tribesmen of Authority: All units under consideration up to now (the three "family" ones and the three "social" ones) have their relationships regulated by councils, which, although bearing different names, have similar and analogous functions. The council of the jma'th must undergo no formality in order to convene, and it has no president, although at times the agreements which it comes to are drawn up in writing. Any male (above the age of puberty) [885] may attend and take part in its deliberations; but the personification [613] of it is embodied in the iziddjifen or headmen of each dharfiqth, and these men together form an authentic and permanent council. This council above all legislates what the jma'th deems necessary, in conformance with custom and its agreements. The assembly itself or its representatives chosen for each particular case[86] make and execute all decisions. It is thus a legislative, consultative and executive body[87]. Its attributes, nonetheless, are constantly limited on the [614] one hand by family law, in the form of reprisals, and on the other by the power of the clan, which tries to keep it from prejudicing neighboring jma'th-s or the clan itself in its external politics. Thus, what it has is an administrative autonomy.

623 This council(s) elects its functionaries, the best defined of 793 which is the fqih of the mosque, who is in charge of leading the 212 prayer and of burial services; he is administrator of mosque property (habus)[88], as well as jural notary and council clerk and secretary. In large councils, however, these jobs may be handled by more or less ignorant tulba (sing. talib)[89], who pompously attribute to themselves 000 the qualifications of qadis. The fqih attended to the resources of the

623 The fqih attended to the resources of the 793 mosque and the necessities of the cult; and the others usually bought
411 arms and ammunition which were lent out in necessary cases.[90] A man thus favored rarely returned his weapon, as the habus was considered to be a "rich widow".[91]

623 The council of the jma'th also maintained agricultural super-
624 visors, usually two who retained this office in perpetuity, even though 312 masters in the art could be called up in necessary instances, such as 242 litigations over other matters.[92]

623 The zealous equality and jealousy of the dharfiqin making up
613 the jma'th were generally responsible for the fact that the latter did not have an individual official representative who presided at meetings or imposed the executive of its decisions; but, at times, when one dharfiqth succeeded in acquiring, through cunning, bravery or money, some degree of preponderance, it generally came to an agreement with the others, and they all designated a representative. After this;
[555] the struggle began between the representative himself, inching his way toward personal power[93], and the jma'th, which was jealous of his
623 attributes and reputation. There were also religious struggles in 578 these minuscule nuclear social units, between, for example, an amrabidh
776 desirous of politico-religious influence and the jma'th, or "power of 792 the laymen", which, through cunning, always knew how to keep him away from the benefits of power, and also excluded him from responsibilities.
623 The representatives took the title which pleased them most, usually shaikh, but they were also known as iziddjifen (sing. aziddjif, literally "head"), or "headmen", and as imqqranen (sing. amqqran, literally "big"), or "big ones". Thus the same anarchy and confusion which we organization, as in the settlement morphology and house distribution of their communities, we may discern the state of disintegration which the Rifian "republics" had attained, the individual rapaciousness of each one and the anarchy of its component parts.

Diagram of Rifian Social Structure[113]

We see in this graphic representation of the principal units in Rifian social structure how these units are originated in the lineages (Sp. original, grupos familiares) whose three ascending categories of nuclear family (Sp. or hogar, R. nubth), lineage branch (jajgu) and lineage proper (dharfiqth), with genealogical relationship as their distinguishing characteristic, form the roots or base of the Rifian arch, as diagrammed here. On reaching ground level (in an upward direction), they become transformed into three other (larger) social units whose distinctive features are expressed above and the apex of which is the tribe (dhaqbitsh), which is bound together with its autonomous institutional parts by the institutional apex of the agrau, or tribal council, the maximal assembly in the region. This arch gives us an idea of the (relative) independence (autonomy?) of its columns, representing clans sustained by the nuclei of jma'ths; and all this gives us also an idea of the whole and of the harmony reigning between this whole and its different parts, of its consistency, of its solidity, and of the importance of all these factors.

113--A few comments must first be made on Blanco's notation of this diagram. Starting below ground level, we have, from left to right, dhaddarth (Blanco's spelling taddartz), "house"; jajgu (Blanco's spelling yasgo), "lineage branch"; and dharfiqth (Blanco's spelling tarfik), "lineage"; and further to the right, the commentary "family group" (grupo familiar). At or just below ground level, slightly above, we see the commentary, to the right and above "family group", "line of blood" (linea de sangre). At ground level, from left to right, we have dhamzyida (Blanco's spelling tamesguida), "mosque"; jma'th (Blanco's spelling yemaa); and iziddjifen (Blanco's spelling islifen), "lineage headmen"; and, further to the right, the commentary "council" (consejo). Further up, each of the three columns proper is labeled, from left to right, suq (Blanco's spelling sok), "market"; qanun (Blanco's spelling kanon), "custom", and imqqranen (Blanco's spelling imkranen), "council members (of the clan)"; and further to the right is the commentary "clan" (fraction). The apex is the dhaqbitsh (Blanco's spelling taqbilt), or "tribe", with a commentary by Blanco to the right: "tribe" (tribu); above this, in brackets, is Aitharba'in "tribal council" (Blanco's spelling ait arbain); above this, agrau (Blanco's spelling agrao), "council meeting site"; and above all, is The Rif (El Rif).

I find this diagram, with its ever upward and onward orientation, very neat as a conceptual plaything...In its theoretical and abstract niceties, it appears almost more the work of a Frenchman than that of a Spaniard. Could this possibly be attributed to Montagne's undeniable influence on Blanco's thinking? However, I seriously question the diagram on the grounds of to what extent it really reflects structural realities (insofar as a structural model of any society created by an anthropologist can be said to approximate the social realities of that society) of Rifian society; and also on the grounds that territorial vs. segmentary features of Rifian social structure, and the roles that these features play within that structure, are neither defined vis-a-vis each other nor in relation to the whole. The whole structure as Blanco gives it is, in fact, too neat, too simple, and too classic (or perhaps Doric?), like the Greek (and most unRifian) arch upon which he models it.

A, [See diagram on p.127-B--Analyst]

621 of Imhauren, of the clan of Aith 'Ari; while the upper part is made up of heterogeneous elements of different tribes. This will eventually happen in Ajdir, where a considerable number of Rifian workers are settling owing to its proximity to the town of Alhucemas. Ajdir has not succeeded in assimilating these people who, installed around and behind the fork in the (Tetuan-Melilla) main road, already form a special quarter which is beginning to be distinguished by the name of Kharras, or "stranger"[121], a disagreeable appellation for them and one which causes them to defend intuitively their jma'ths of origin. A future modification of the jurisdiction of this quarter cannot thus be considered as injurious to the constitution of the jma'th.

We thus see that the traditional jma'th in this tribe, in accordance with the data in our possession at the moment regarding this problem, may or may not have a familial origin (sic)[122], as an analogous examination of the Qa'idate of Nkur also seems to demonstrate.

621 614 If we limit ourselves, in this qa'idate, to the clan of Aith Bu 'Ayyash, one of those which from time immemorial seems to have kept its jma'ths most intact, we see that the only one to which a common origin or ancestor is attributed is that of Aith Ta'a. But if, [613] for example, we examine Isufiyen in this light, we find that of its five dharfiqin or patri lineages, three (I'adwiyen, Ihaqqumen and Imdihiriyen) are from the tribe of Ibdharsen (Mtalsa) in the Eastern Rif, and have the same ancestor, while of the two remaining ones, one (Aith Ta'rafth) is from the tribe of Aith Yittuft[123]. Thus, through the elimination of four out of the five kin groups in question, the only one which is left, Aith Musa w 'Amar[124], is the only possible candidate for earliest occupancy and for the foundation of the jma'th. As it happens, this is the case here.

Passing now to the jma'th of Aith Bukhrif, we see, analogously, that while the founding or ancestral dharfiqth, Aith Wuzghar, that of the present (1935) Qa'id of Nkur, Haddu n Muh Amzzyan, is considered to be descended from the "Aith Ya'ra" or Bni Marin, the former inhabitants of the City of Nkur[125], the other dharfiqin making up the jma'th do so without any apparent relationship to each other. The kin group whose ancestor arrived first was an Imrabdhen lineage from Ibdharsen, formed by the Aith Siddiq, Aith Tumritsh and Aith Tizza; this was followed by Aith Yunis, from the clan of Asht Yunis in the tribe of Igzinnayen; and finally, by the I'addiyen from the tribe of Axt Tuzin, the most recent of all.

If we turn now to the jma'th of Tazurakhth, we see the same thing, but with an increase in complexity, for the dharfiqth which is considered to be the founding one is that of Aith Bukhudam[126]. This group later received the following additional increments: a dharfiqth named Aith Ufaran from the subclan of Aith Turirth to the south; a second, much larger dharfiqth from the jma'th of Igar Ufadhis (local pronunciation Iyar Ufadhis) in the clan of Aith Bu Idhir of the tribe of Thimsaman, named Aith r-Qman (comprising today the four dharfiqin of Aith 'Aru Hammu, Yinn[127] 'Abdsram Bu 'Azza, Yinn 'Abd Allah u Hmidh and Ibaranen[128]); a third, Aith Tizi Marda, came from the clan of Amjau in the East Rifian tribe of Aith S'aid; a fourth, Ihamdiwen, from the jma'th of Asht Tghirasth[129] in the clan of Asht Yunis in the tribe of Igzinnayen; a fifth, from Aith 'Aisa in the tribe of Aith S'aid[130];

621 a sixth, a large one named Aith 'Aisa, from the jma'th of Aith 'Ammar
613 u S'aid in the subclan of Iraqraqen in the clan of Aith Hadhifa (com-
614 prising today the two dharfiqin of Aith 'Aisa--sometimes referred to 619 as Aith 'Aisa w Anu, or "the sons of 'Aisa of the well"--and Aith Injin); a seventh, Aith Si Hmand 'Aisa, from the clan of Aith 'Abd Allah; and an eighth, and last, Aith Tihar, from the jma'th of Tfsast in the subclan of Timarzga to the South.

621 The net result of all the foregoing is that even such a multiplicity of examples will not clarify the question for us, considering that, in Aith Waryaghar, there are traditional jma'ths which have been split since antiquity, and split in such a way that to bring them together again now would create a tremendous political as well as administrative difficulty[131]. This would, indeed, be next to impossible, due to the difficulties of all kinds already felt by the Rifians prior to the Spanish occupation, difficulties which brought them to the transcendental act of separation. This fact on the one hand, and, on the other, the fact that the traditional jma'th in Aith Waryaghar does not seem to present an ancestry which is common to all its constituent groups or a type of "family origin" (i.e. common ancestorship) in the form or for the ends which interest the order of the Spanish regional administration. Under these conditions, it seems the best thing in this tribe, if our knowledge should not lead us to other conclusions, to continue the sedimentation initiated some time ago, avoiding modifications which do not justify an imperious necessity or a convenience manifest to all lights, something which even the author was unable to avert, and to discount, for this reason, any.....or superficially learned innovatory zeal.[132]

The ("holy" clan of the) Asht 'Aru 'Aisa are descended from Sidi Musa bin Mshish[163], the brother of one of the "poles" of Western Islam, Sidi 'Abd al-Salam bin Mshish, who is buried in the Jbil 'Alam, in the Bni 'Arus of the Jbala. Sidi Musa is buried among the Khmid(?) (unidentifiable).

The principal idea to be extracted from the foregoing is the following: around a principal nucleus consisting of Asht 'Asim, Imzdurar and Asht Marar[164], clans which are known to and recognized by all the Igzinnayen, there came over the course of time an infinite number of lineages originating from very diverse points of northern Morocco; and these lineages intermingled with the above. Their motives for so doing varied between hunger and war. They were brought to the Rif either because there was no room for them elsewhere or because the possibilities of living well there attracted them.....It is probably necessary to look for their origins in regions which are particularly barren and unproductive, such as the Khuld of Huwwara or the northern part of the Angad Plain, in the case of elements from the Aith Bu Yihyi; the Tafrata for the Ahl Rashida, the clayey hills of Mtalsa, and, in general, all the places more or less bordering the Mulwiya River, which, even if they are by no means paradises, are at least hospitable (sic)[165].

3) Qur'anic Instruction: --This is organized in exactly the same way as it is among the Rifian tribes in the Spanish Zone, and is largely beyond the control of the Administration....There is usually a school in each village, the fqih of which is paid annually and in kind by its inhabitants. Instruction is carried out almost 000 almost postulate a sequence more or less as follows: people (and particularly the most important ones, i.e. members of the council) gather in the mosque on Fridays. This, in Durkheimian terms, would make a neat example of the three-way continuum of time, space and society! The fact that the Rifian term for mosque is dhamzidha in no way negates this rather attractive hypothesis (suggested by Ernest Gellner, personal communication, Feb. 4, 1961), for dhamzidha is itself derived from another Arabic word for mosque, masjid.

11--Dhaqbitsh, pl. dhiqbar (from Arabic qabila) is the Rifian term for "tribe", the ceiling unit in the region.

613 621 619 114 614 12--"Fraction": translator's quotation marks. This term, very current in the literature on North African social structure (and deriving from Arabic nuss, "half", tulut, "third", rba', "fourth" and khums, "fifth", each one of which usually refers to the number of clans or top-level segments a given tribe contains), is one which I find both imprecise and misleading. What one should read for "fraction" is either clan or maximal, primary or top-level segment of a tribe. What is totally missing in the term "fraction" is a notion of process.

As Blanco himself thought the term "fraction" absurd (as he indicated in a pencilled comment on a report on village etymologies in the Jbil of Aith Waryaghar by another interventor, dated 1939), we shall henceforth take his cue and call it "clan"--even though he continued to employ "fraction" in the bulk of his writing!

13--The concept of the relative autonomy or independence of the tribal clan (Blanco's "fraction") is, as far as we know, an original contribution by Blanco to the overall study of Berber social structure (even though Blanco's thinking may have had its roots, on this score, in Montagne, op. cit., 1930). It is, considering the time and place it appeared, a challenging and cogent theory, and Blanco discusses it at length in the chapter on Social Organization, as well as in La Ley Rifeña, 1939. The fact that the notions of balance and opposition in all segmentary societies have become anthropological commonplaces since Evans-Pritchard's Nuer work does not vitiate Blanco's argument.

000 14--Again, in the choice of words which these notes represent, Blanco gives no definition, and we fear that, although a literal translation renders the reading awkward, a substitution of our own terms might falsify what he had in mind, namely, to attempt to establish criteria for differentiation between social and political units. In our opinion, most of these distinctions exist in the author's mind only, and do not correspond to any sociopolitical realities; for, on upper levels of segmentation at least, social units and political units invariably tend to merge.

15--It is, of course, true that only men make alliances, wage war and engage in politics (councils, etc.), but there seems no need to belabor this rather obvious point. More subtle, however, is the implicit--and possibly unintentional--distinction made between social structure and territorial organization. In the Rif, as elsewhere, the territorial organization reflects a genealogically oriented social system which has been brought down to ground level, so to speak, and

[613] 47--An individual does not, sensu stricto, enter a liff on his own, but is rather affiliated automatically with the liff or wider alliance to which his lineage belongs, although he may later switch his allegiance to fracture lineage unity. (This is not uncommon.)

[191] 48--The number of Rifians who are adherents to Muslim religious brotherhoods (a wide-spread phenomenon in other parts of Morocco) is not large, although it has remained fairly constant even after Moroccan independence and the wane of the fraternities' influence
[113] on the Moroccan political scene. For a discussion of the role of brotherhoods in Morocco, see F. S. Vidal, "Religious Brotherhoods and Moroccan Politics", Middle East Journal, 1950. ...The most important brotherhood in the Central Rif is the Darqawa, with adepts
[668] in the Aith Waryaghar, Aith 'Ammarth and Igzinnayen; it is said that Abd al-Krim himself was a member of this order originally, but that on his rise to power he suppressed all brotherhood activities in a clean sweep in order to minimize the possibility of their turning against him. Other orders include the 'Alawiyin, among some of the mountain segments of the Aith Waryaghar, and the Tijaniyin and Nasiriyin in the Igzinnayen.

428
114
[794] 49--Here again Blanco is in error, as habus has nothing to do with the return to her father's house of a divorced woman. Habus is a religious or charitable endowment, and in Morocco it usually takes the form of a property donation to a religious institution, such as a mosque or a saint's tomb. The word implies, always, property which has been set aside; and although Rifians do not admit any notion of "private habus" in theory, they do so in practice. In the Central Atlas, for example, a man who is afraid that his sons will sell his land may put it in a state of habus, as it were, to prevent them from doing so; and while such a notion is unthinkable to Rifians, it is equally unthinkable that a son would sell his father's patrimony! Thus the idea of habus is intimately linked with that of indivision, and, as such, it has a bearing on the position of women with respect to inheritance rules. Although women theoretically inherit both real and movable property, their share almost invariably remains, in practice, in the hands of their fathers or brothers when they marry. Rifians say that it is perfectly permissible for a married women to come back to her father's house and cultivate her property; but that this is an evasion is readily seen from the fact that in Morocco it is men and not women who cultivate property! Thus, in effect, the "men's habus", of a private rather than a religious nature, safeguards a daughter's share of the inheritance--for the sons! For a discussion
[113] of this problem in the Sus and Anti-Atlas, see Andre Adam, "Les Origines Ethniques de la Population Marocaine Musulmane de Casablanca", in Anthony F. C. Wallace, Ed., Selected Papers of the Fifth International Congress of Anthropological and Ethnological Sciences, Philadelphia, September 1-9, 1956, Phildelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1960, pp. 371-76 (our reference to p. 372). Adam refers to this problem within the context of temporary emigration of small grocery-store keepers from the Anti-Atlas to Casablanca.

623 793 411 421 423 91--The comparison which Blanco makes here of the institution of habus to a rich widow is a challenging one; for after land has been donated to a mosque as habus, the question of who works it is resolved by the nadhir l-ahbas, or habus property administrator, of which there is one, at present, in each province of Morocco (with a central Ministry of Habus in Rabat). He goes to the tribal markets periodically and, through the market crier, auctions it off to the highest bidder, who in turn receives all the harvest for his own use. This system is in vogue at present and was also current during Spanish times. During the "Ripublik", however, in the days before there was a nadhir l-ahbas, the members of the jma'th concerned worked habus land, and, after selling the harvest, used the profits to buy mats for the mosque. Sometimes, also, the jma'th would designate a poor man to work habus land for a fixed share of the field (usually one-fifth or one-fourth), though this was not as common as the preceding arrangement.

000 [114] 92--Blanco is mistaken here, as there was, and still is, only one agricultural-irrigational expert, the aquwwam, whose judgment is generally sought in disputes over irrigation water.

[114] 93--Again in this instance one can detect the influence on Blanco of Robert Montagne, who devotes the whole last third of his book (Montagne, op. cit., 1930) to the "rise to personal power" of the three Grand Qa'ids (the Glawi, the Mtuggi and the Guntafi) in the Western Atlas, and cites the rise of 'Abd al-Krim in the Rif as a parallel case. Under the French, the Glawi soon eclipsed his two competitors to become a single "Lord of the Western Atlas", as well as Pasha of Marrakesh; while it was the presence of the Spaniards in the Eastern Rif which produced the Rifian "national" leader, 'Abd al-Krim. Montagne's argument for a kind of unidirectional political evolution, from the nameless members of a village council, in the middle and latter half of the 19th century, through to nationally known tribal or regional leaders' through a continuous scramble-for-power process of "top-dog-ism", is a very persuasive one. Whatever objections one may have to it, it is likely to remain the argument for a long time to come--because today, in the 1960's, the facts of the matter have become almost impossible to (re-)check; and the old men who remember such things are now all dead or dying off.

● [613] 94--"Government by the few": possibly, if the lineage or clan headman can be so designated. However, each lineage head was in reality little more than a primus inter pares, and anyone who attained clan-wide recognition was just that much more primus. Once again we are faced with how badly the European shoe fits the Berber foot.

95--The Spanish original is absurdo.

96--The jma'th is not just an economic organism or organization, but a group of people, the majority of whom are genealogically related to each other, living together in a hamlet or village which bears its own name and forms a member group in a segmentally organized system of such jma'th-s, all of which belong to a territorial or segmental unit of a higher order. Relationships between member jma'th-s of the same order of segmentation are at once economic, social, political, legal, and religious.

000 [114) 118--The jma'th of Isrihan gave its name to a whole subclan. The picture, however, is somewhat more complicated than Blanco would lead us to believe, although he is substantially correct. The founding family of Isrihan was the lineage of Aith Yikhrif w 'Amar, parts of which are not only to be found in Upper Isrihan and in Lower Isrihan, but in Aith Hishim, Aith Wamra, and Azghar, all of which communities are in the lowlands.

The true Isrihan, then, are fairly well spread out over parts of the tribal territory and in some cases they have differentiated themselves by merely tacking the place name of their new location onto their lineage name, e.g. Isrihan n Buham, Isrihan n Aith Qamra. This is of special interest in view of the fact that most of the original land of the Isrihan, on the northern slope of the Jbil Hamam, is now occupied by a lineage named Imjawiyen, who claim descent from the clan of Amjau in the tribe of the Aith Sa'id in the Eastern Rif. This lineage, moreover, became numerous and powerful enough so that its members split into two hostile and feuding factions.

[114] 119--Blanco fails to point out that Upper Thamasind belongs to the subclan of Thigarth in the clan of Aith 'Ari, while Lower Thamasind belongs to that of Aith Ughiryizan in the clan of Aith Yusif w 'Ari; and this fact detracts much weight from his argument here.

120--This, in effect, is the reverse of the principle of segmental discontinuity; and the most striking example in the Rif, on the tribal level, of this kind of heterogeneity, in which virtually every segment or clan claims an origin different from that of the others, is that of the Aith 'Ammarth, whose people say not only was their land uninhabited before their arrival, but that they came from many different tribes to fill it up. Their explanation of their tribal name, Aith 'Ammarth, "people of the filling-up", supports this. An even better example is afforded by the Siksawa or Isiksawn of the Western High Atlas (Berque, op. cit., 1955, passim).

121--The normal Rifian term for "stranger" is abarrani (from Arabic barrani); kharras is unknown to us. The community of Ajdir is inhabited by the members of three lineages, Aith Mis'aud u Yusif, Aith 'Aru 'Aisa and Aith Zar'a (the last-mentioned being that of 'Abd al-Krim); but there are, in addition, numerous stranger accretions, particularly since pacification, and Ajdir is now the largest single community (almost 5000 persons) in the Aith Waryaghar. It is equally true that if one asks about traditional segmentation, one gets only the three lineages mentioned above, for one's informants will not mention the strangers, whom they consider of little account, unless they are forced to do so. This is a problem which would amply repay careful study.

122--What Blanco means by "having a familial origin" is descent from a common ancestor.

123--Etymology of Aith Ta'rafth,: "the people of the Arabic language". This is a possible lead to the speech of their lineage ancestor, who, according to my own field notes, came not from the Aith Yittuft (two out of three clans of which speak Arabic today) but from Algeria.

000 152--This is true, and as Coon indicates, it is probably a hall-mark of considerable antiquity. See Coon, op. cit., 1931, p. 19, for traditions of origin of the clans and subclans of the Igzinnayen, many of which conflict with those given by Blanco below.

153--True; but does this necessitate the employment of value judgments as to physical type and temperament?

154--According to our notes, the Dharwa Haddu are autochthonous to Igzinnayen.

[613] [628] 155--According to Coon (op. cit., 1931, p. 105), many people of the dharfiqth of Asht 'Abd r-Mumin in the village of Iharrushen, of Asht 'Asim Proper, went to l-Mta as exiles after their feud with the Asht Tadmuth; the Hajj Biqqish, in fact, was a moving spirit in banishing them, as one of their members shot three of the Asht Tadmuth on the feast day of the 'Aid l-Khir. Perhaps poverty was also a factor in the move to l-Mta of members of other lineages in the Asht 'Asim.

156--Ishillahan: our notes state that their origin traditions are not from Andalusia, but from the Eastern Rifian tribe on the Aith Wurishik, which would accord better with their "Berber" name.

157--Ihadhriyen: our notes say that they have nothing to do with the Jbarna, other than that they are members of the same tribe.

158--Thaghirasth is autochthonous to the Igzinnayen, according to our notes.

159--Asht r-'Arqub: our notes contain no reference to Sidi 'Azzuz, in connection with the lineage.

160--Ikhabbaben: our notes contain no reference, regarding them, to Branis.

161--Asht Hazim: our notes, regarding them, contain no reference to Aith Iznasan.

162--To our knowledge they are all local lineages.

163--The Asht 'Aru 'Aisa are more properly descended from Sidi Ahmad, the son of Sidi Musa bin Mshish, and known as Sidi Hand u Musa. He is buried in Swaiyar, in the Asht 'Aru 'Aisa, while his father is buried in Jbil 'Alam of Bni 'Arus of the Jbala. Aru 'Aisa ('Ali u 'Aisa, or 'Ali bin 'Aisa) himself, the real apex of the lineage, is to be found some 11 generations later than Sidi Hand u Musa on the genealogy of these shurfa, whose authenticity is beyond question and is recognized in the right, which they exercise, to share in the annual proceeds of the box (sunduq) of Mulay Idris in Fez.

It is also said that 'Abd al-Krim was descended from the shurfa Sidi Hand u Musa of Asht 'Aru 'Aisa.

[616] 164--The Asht 'Asim and Imzdurar, each being the strongest representative of its respective liff, almost certainly formed the kernel of such a nucleus; but it seems to us that the Asht Yunis might be substituted for the Asht Marar, which is only a subclan of the Imzdurar.

[311]
165--The "hospitality" of the landscape around the Mulwiya River contradicts Blanco's earlier remark about unproductivity; and the Central Rif itself, in any event, is one of the poorest and most barren regions of Morocco.

166--"Primary instruction", or ta'lim al-awwal, is the basic Qur'anic instruction which the fqih gives young boys in the village mosque, while "secondary instruction", or ta'lim ath-thani, is a step beyond this--post-graduate study, as it were, in the Friday mosque. By this time the amhadar has become a tarib; he can theoretically read and write the Qur'an, and he also becomes versed in the writing of charms and amulets and the sewing of jillabas.

[431] 167--Ma'ruf is a gift of either money or food to the students in the mosque.

168--The most obvious spring in the Asht Marar, Thara Tazzugwakhth or, in Arabic, 'Ain Hamra, which produces the best mineral water in the Rif, even though it only trickles out of the source, is not mentioned.

169--These last three communities are traditionally affiliated with the clan of Imzdurar, not with Asht 'Asim.

170--The Imrabdhen of Wawizaght are also termed Imrabdhen Ya'gubi, and are considered shurfa.

171--Midbuh was from Asht r-Udha; Buhut r-'Asimi, as his name indicates, from Buridh in Asht 'Asim; and 'Allal n Dahu from Asht Mhand.

172--For "anarchy", read "Ripublik".

[616]
[578] 173--Of Azru, who later became the head of one of the main tribal liffs in opposition to Hajj Biqqish of Ikhuwanen in Asht 'Asim.

174--Now held at Tizi Usli.

[616]
[619] 175--In his earlier years, however, Biqqish only had control of his own liff of Asht 'Asim and Asht 'Aru 'Aisa, while Si Hmid Ubarshan had the rest of the tribe under his thumb.

[613]
[616] The dharfiqth of Yinn 'Ari Mqaddim in Aith Yusif of Thimarzga in Aith Waryaghar were Biqqish's in-laws, through the marriage of his daughter Mimuna to Muh n 'Amar jn-Mqaddim (see text); and the liff created between Biqqish and this single lineage of Aith Waryaghar was strong enough for them to support him against 'Abd al-Krim later on; and 'Abd al-Krim, in consequence, burned their houses.

176--Afuzar is on the border of Aith Waryaghar and Igzinnayen, between Asrafil (Thimarzga) on the Waryaghar side and Iharrushen (Asht 'Asim) on that of the Igzinnayen.

[176]
[178] 177--The principal saint of the Marnisa. Near the Monday Market of the Aith 'Ammarth is the mosque of Sidi 'Ari n Dawud, where the Aith 'Ammarth all go to take oath; but Sidi 'Ari himself is buried in Marnisa.

178--The date of Biqqish's death is not certain, but probably early 1926. His body was taken to the cemetery at Ikhuwanen for burial.

J) Note on the Rifian Jma'th (Noticia sobre la Yemáa)

N.B. Undated MSS., probably written 1934-1936, Catalogue No. W1/ñ, Sección Africa, National Library, Madrid.

"An old, confused and nostalgic tribal memory of which so many people are unaware, although they all utilize it and nobody expects it. How does it work, and how can it best be reactivated?"

Organs and Functions:

621 613 1) The jma'th is the association of several lineages (grupos familiares) or dharfiqin toward social ends and objectives. It constitutes the elementary unit of Rifian social structure.[1]

[691] 2) It is personified in the iziddjifen, the headmen of these lineage-groups and their authentic representatives, zealous guardians of Custom (qa'ida), which is often codified into written qanuns established during an agraw or council-meeting.

3) It is visibly manifested in the mosque, the local community and the lands which belong to it, all of which give rise to a spatial discontinuity and elastic boundaries, the origin of not a few quarrels.

4) Objectives: to regulate the coexistence of these (lineage) groups, to watch over them and to administrate their common patrimony.

5) Obligations: these were to attend to communal services and property (prayer,...education, hospitality, external relations, harka, prestations, collective responsibility and distribution of property, lands, irrigation, spoils of war, and fines), with the exception, in theory, of anything relating to personal and possessory status (marriage, inheritance).

[594] [114] 1--The elementary social unit, in the Rif as elsewhere, is the elementary or nuclear family, and hence Blanco is here, again, in error. A more easily defensible argument might have been a consideration of the jma'th as a kind of elementary political unit.

671 If aside from local community questions such as irrigation, hospitality and matters dealing with education, these community charters also deal with "crimes of blood" (delitos de sangre), one may see in them, more than the incumbency of these units (organisms), the necessity of providing for the lack of other upper-level associations which were lacking in this organized anarchy, which, in a happy phrase, may be attributed to those days when social disintegration attenuated the functioning of the upper-level units: clan (fracción) and tribe.

621 623 627 10) Security: Internally, security was guaranteed in normal times by the iziddjifen themselves, through the resolution of any incidents and the clearing up of any disputes which might arise, while in the internal political struggle of its council the popular spirit 623 predominated. This was even more the case when within the council the • 613 equilibrium between dharfiqin or agnatic lineages was broken and one 621 lineage came to predominate, as now it was one of its representatives who, in the last analysis, came to achieve the delegation of the permanent executive function of security, under the pompous and strange designation of mqaddim or shaikh[7], who, satisfying his own personal vanity, brought about the envy of the iziddjifen, who were very jealous of their own prerogatives, who were paid in their jobs (sic)[8], and who were opposed to the notion of personal power for which the [671] struggle now began. In this respect the qanun of the jma'th of (Lower) Thamasind (Aith Waryaghar) is of interest.[9]

7--Again Blanco reveals an anti-Arab and a pro-Rifian bias, perhaps: he would obviously have preferred the designation amghar. However, and more to the point: he is also equally aware of the superfluity of such titles in a society as fiercely egalitarian as that of the Rifian tribes.
[114] 8--This was hardly the case: no tribal leaders (to say nothing of mere lineage headmen) in pre-Protectorate Morocco were ever paid in the formal sense of the word. Remuneration came through occasional "perks".
9--Cf. La Ley Rifeña, 1939, Chapter V.

613 621 616 182 This internal equilibrium between dharfiqin was maintained, more than by the play of (within) the jma'th, by the liff alliance system which, linking tribes, clans, communities and lineages into two rival bands, created the miracle of permitting the existence of minuscule units of this type amongst others more powerful, although the clarification of this point would take us further away from our present intentions.

614 619 701 Security in external relations was attained by the connection with the upper-level units, clan and tribe, and verified by means of their representatives and the contingents of armed men which on special occasions they had to send as irregular tribal troops in a harka, which defended group interests in any revolts or fratricidal struggles.

646 619 The representatives of the jma'th in its external relations are locally known by the name of imgharen, and more commonly by the Arabized term aitharbi'in (the forty: sic), because each khums (one-fifth of the tribe) generally provided eight representatives (sic)[10]. These men of the aitharbi'in were generally accompanied by an escort of aith amzzyan (or aith umzzyan?)[11] who officiated both as advisers and as witnesses to the agraw or council meeting where questions of common interest were aired and examined.

721 621 613 When these questions necessitated armed expeditions outside the unit concerned, the (manpower) quota which each jma'th had to provide

[114] 10--This makes a neat mathematical model, but in practice it is based upon a false premise, as it has been demonstrated previously that the term aitharbi'in refers in fact to "representatives of the people" and that it has nothing whatsoever to do with the notion of "forty".

[114] 11--The concept of aith umzzyan or imzzyanen, "little ones", "minors", as participants in the Rifian political system is, again, erroneous. It is only in the present paper that Blanco introduces the concept in this fashion.

721 621 613 was imposed by the tribe or the clan: it was based on distribution amongst the several dharfiqin comprising the jma'th in question, while the place and date where and when they had to present themselves was communicated to them by the leader of the expedition, who also examined cases of exemption and desertion.

Thus, both in theory and in reality, all the operations of recruitment of our European municipalities were incumbent upon the jma'th; while relief and provisions, the personal and complementary obligation of the dharfiqth, were sometimes assumed by the jma'th when the earlier operations failed, as a kind of advance.

721 182 This natural system, alleviating the principal one of a number of onerous chores which are discharged by (military) services in European bureaucracies, permitted the Rifians to give their full attention both to military operations and to politics. It bound all of them together, the front and the rearguard, in a common interest, principally economic, which in lieu of discipline was what reinforced local spirit. The economic interest (the saving of ammunition in combat and sobriety in eating--for the individual had to pay for both out of his own pocket), apart from avoiding not a little dissatisfaction and worry, afforded the harka a high degree of addiction to rapine, given the fact that its members had to live on their own account in enemy territory in order to compensate for the woebegone consignments of the wretched rearguard, justifying through its well-known raids its desire to fill its stomach, the clearest of all its bellicose undertakings. Such that, once the booty was obtained, the harka was dissolved on more than one occasion.

person took to the storeroom the share of grain which had been allotted to him.

The fqih was contracted and paid through this share of grain. The mqaddim's job was gratuitous and was reduced to the acquisition of mats, lighting, buckets, brooms, small repairs, the storing of the harvest and the payment of the fqih, with due notice given to the jma'th. For other expenses, such as additions and improvements on the building, etc., there had to be prior agreement on the part of the jma'th, i.e. acceptance of these matters by the various lineage heads.

From this simple mechanism and the character of these properties resulted their scrupulous and austere administration by lay tribesmen (author's italics), which any other procedure would have been hard put to surpass. The result was that not only were the summary needs of this sort, today unsettled, catered to, but that it was rare to find a mosque which did not possess surplus stores good for five or six years. Hence this constituted a true estate, a localistic tie which everyone voluntarily tried to improve and which today it is possible that we (i.e. the Spanish administration) have disrupted.

It has been said that our (i.e. the Spanish) occupation and action have forced the discovery and have focused upon habus (religious and/or charitable endowment) properties which were either hidden or were on the point of disappearance. In the (tribal) countryside, this is either an error or an infantilism. Not only have we (the administration) discovered nothing of the sort, but we have confused things a great deal, as anyone who reads this paper, or rather, anyone

695 At other times they decide to submit the 696 resolution to the clan council on the next market day; but when the 623 judgment, which is both swift and free of charge, has been rendered, the individual responsible can only comply with the council's decision; and he must do so not only more than rapidly, but virtually explosively, or be sentenced by his neighbors and his peers. If he resists, his only recourse is to take up arms, as everybody else is now after him, and this in itself obliges him to do so. The proceedings are rapid and gratuitous, as aforestated, except if experts are called upon to intervene; they are given an honorarium, the amount of which is determined by the custom of the tribe in question, and consists of such and such a percentage of the value of the appraised object or the object of the litigation[32].

692 Thus, true jural procedure, for the Rifian, is to render public
695 any offense or injury he has suffered, and to gain adherents to his point of view. First his family or kin group wants to intervene on his behalf, then his social grouping (properly: his lineage), and finally his liff, his last recourse. This multiplies the various contingencies and unsuspected turns the case may take ad infinitum, and tends to render useless any reclamations against an offender who is more powerful than the injured party. The latter may not take any action against him, but will often afterwards wait in ambush for him in order to redress the wrong! It is a procedure which.....awakens manliness and courage.....

[671] A good example of the executive procedure in criminal law is the qanun
[613] between dharfiqin[33].

000 Bshara, or procedure of recuperation[34]. (No text here whatsoever: translator's note.)

695 F) Oaths (fragmentary):[35]

In most cases, it is not the plaintiff who must prove his pretensions or denunciations, but the accused, who has to justify himself if the complaint is false. There are cases in which the accused has [562] no defense, such as offenses against women, in which the notion of the latter as minors comes into play. If the accusation of a women against her assailant is sufficient to punish the latter[36], where does one find more protection for the woman? Perhaps the rigor in these matters and 695 839 the fear of accusation by jealous husbands or fear of reprisals have permitted to a certain extent crimes such as rape[36a] A etc., which, if not frequent, are nonetheless common enough to have a sanction imposed upon them in defense of the common moral standard.

695 [671] [191] Means of Proof: Testimonies differ from those admitted by the Shari'a. In most cases testimony is invalid unless five members of the accused man's family (i.e. his agnates) are present to swear. They are 695 623 previously selected by him, but the jma'th, who know very well the men constitute its membership, can refuse to admit any of them that it wants [613] to[37]. In serious cases, ten members of the dharfiqth of the accused are required to take oath; they are, however, not chosen by the defendant himself, but by the jma'th, among (translator's italics) the members of his dharfiqth[38].

695 829 181 Thus, if oaths are permitted as means of proof, the number of cojurors varies according to the gravity of the offense; this provides a greater guarantee and shows in yet another way that Rifian society is not individual, but solid and familial; in its concept of collective responsibility, blame or sanctions attach to the group rather than to A, [This footnote was not included in the notes at the end of this section, p. 229--Analyst]

681 H) Sanctions: Further Notes (fragmentary):

1) Punishment: fine, exile, or death of person responsible, whether an individual or a family group[55].

[671] 2) Gradation: variable, according to stipulations in the various [672] qanuns[56]. Rifian law recognizes the same degree of responsibility in his accomplices as in the man who actually committed the crime, by assimilating them with his kin group[57].

681 3) Victim: receives no indemnity, except through what he or
613 his kinsmen get as their share of the fine, which is equitably dis-
[571] tributed among all the representatives of the dharfiqin[58], thus appearing more than anything else as a payment for services rendered; and the dharfiqin heads divided it up in the same way among their constituent nubath[59]. Thus, if the Rifian is encumbered with the responsibility of executive power[60] (all are obliged to stand against an aggressor), he still participates in the benefits of such power in a true popular sovereignty, and he never cedes his rights or duties.

000 4) Role of Jma'th in Application of Custom: to influence matters or conceal them, by money, force or politicking behind the scenes. Agrau or assembly of the aitarba'in; assessors and arbiters (tulba, shurfa and imrabdhen); role of liffs (aid to their liff-mates in payment of fines, etc.) (This subsection is completely fragmentary.)

682 In summation, three kinds of offenses were punished:
683 1) murder and woundings, with corresponding fines, and vengeance;

683 2) abuse of women (if voluntary on their part, each party had to 684 pay 50 duros, and if it was purely and simply rape, the guilty man paid 50 duros);

000 latter's kinsmen before he can get away. Even in this case, the killer could generally get off if he were able to pay a 2000-duro fine (rhaqq) to the imgharen on the spot, if he was lucky enough to be caught by them and not by his victim's agnates.

[114] [464] [167] 52--Why should the Rifians have been acquainted with the qanuns of the Algerian Kabyles? Granted that Rifian labor migration to Algeria, prior to 1955, was very extensive, it must be remembered that Rifians went to the plains and vineyards of western Algeria (not to Kabylia) to work and send remittances to their families, not to compare notes with their fellow Berbers in Kabylia!

53--This is entirely true, though we know of one case in which, in 1926, after 'Abd al-Krim's defeat, a man from one of the mountain clans of Aith Waryaghar was beaten to death, by order of a lowland qaid from the same tribe, for refusing to hand two rifles in his possession over to the Spaniards.

[171] 54--In the Central Atlas, half ddiyit (blood money to victim's agnates) is paid by a man for shooting at someone else and missing him, but full ddiyit for taking aim and not shooting (E. Gellner, "The Concept of Kinship", Philosophy of Science, vol. 27, no. 2, 1960, pp. 187-204.) In other words, what is punished is the intent to kill, and on this subject Blanco has some interesting remarks to make in the chapter on the qanuns of Dhmasind and of Aith 'Abd Allah in La Ley Rifeña (pp. 41-3, 47, 50). In the Rif, however, this is manifested in a different way under different circumstances: ddiyith is paid to the victim's family, under normal conditions, by the killer, who must also pay rqisas to the victim himself in case of wounding. The amount of the ddiyith is anything up to 1200 duros, while that of the rqisas, depends on the nature of the wound. However, there is no question at all of either ddiyith or rqisas being paid if the intended victim has not been harmed. This is the case if the attempted murder has taken place outside the market; but if it has taken place on market day and within the market (even though there is again an exemption from ddiyith and rqisas) the rhaqq or market fine must be paid in full (2000 duros) to the imgharen, because the would-be assassin is an amsasar (pl. imsasaren) or trouble-maker who has knowingly tried to "break" the market by flouting its regulations.

681 682 696 55--In case of murder, only the murderer himself went into exile. He did so immediately after the crime, so that he would not be killed in turn by his victim's agnates. Exile meant that he sought refuge, as an adhrib (pl. idhriben), (derived from Arabic talib, "enemy") in the territory of another tribe, whose members sheltered and protected him until such time (if ever) that he could go home. On occasion, as [613] Blanco suggests, whole lineages have been forced into exile; Coon, in Flesh of the Wild Ox (pp. 74-108), gives an example from the Igzinnayen. However, this particular instance was the result of a decree of the Aitharba'in after a long and bitter feud; and as such, it was exceptional. The rule was that only the murderer fled; he was not accompanied by nine of his agnates, as in the Central Atlas (even though these latter returned after three days in order to start making overtures for payment of ddiyit to the dead man's agnates).

[182] Individual liffs bind together individuals or families, persons and possessions, and make for solidarity in the payment of fines, in both defense and attack[21].

2) General Liff:--I think the raison d'etre of the general liff to be purely defensive. These large-scale liffs are real military [619] alliances brought about in order to maintain territorial integrity, and it is they which have permitted the coexistence of minuscule tribes alongside of large and powerful ones. The situation in this respect is analogous to that of Switzerland in Europe; and among the most typical Switzerlands in the Rif are the Thafarsith and the Aith 'Ammarth[22].....In a general liff, it is not individual or kin group interests which are in opposition to each other and come into play, but rather the jurisdictional limits and the autonomy of the social groupings (i.e. clans) which integrate them. The general liff [613] obligates with the same end and binds together with the same strength the individuals belonging to rival dharfiqin. There is thus, I think, [171] a notable difference in the two classes of liffs, although the end result or defensive spirit is the same[23]; analogously, there are alliances between European nations which are destined to preserve their independence, as well as friendships of more of an individual or econ- [562] omic character between their members....The national liff, to call it thus, cannot be confused with the social forms which have already been considered above, for while the latter place mutual obligations upon and bind together individuals and lands, the general liff usually applies only to men and binds together only warriors[24].

616 another (and/or alternative) division of the Aith Waryaghar into two 619 top-level segments. This division is above and beyond that of the [124] khmas, and it was dictated to the writer by the late Qa'id Haddu n Muh Amzzyan of Aith Bu 'Ayyash, a man whose knowledge of his own tribe was considered by his fellows to be unrivalled. In this division, Top Segment I is labeled Aith Khattab, and consists of Aith Yusif w 'Ari (plus Aith 'Ari) and Aith 'Abd Allah, while Top Segment II consists of Aith Bu 'Ayyash (with Aith 'Adhiya) and Aith Hadhifa. If the subsegments of these top segments are aligned into their component liffs, as above, the balance of power is completely even. The primary key to the 616 problem, therefore, is the khums of Imrabdhen, the presence of which,
619 in the Aith Waryaghar, tips the scale in favor of Faction B (above).
614 The Imrabdhen, as their name indicates, are the major intrusive element
792 in the tribe, a holy clan in a lay tribal unit, so to speak. Tradition
792 has it that the ancestor of a major Imrabdhen lineage branch, Sidi Mhand
● [613] u-Musa, married a daughter of one of the top imgharen of the Aith Yusif w 'Ari; and thus the alliance between them. It was highly beneficial to both parties because the Imrabdhen received the protection of the laymen of Faction B, so to speak, while the latter derived prestige from having holy men in residence. In time, with the proliferation of the Imrabdhen, the latter came to acquire the status of a khums, and their subsegments spread out over much of the length and breadth of the tribal territory, forming islets, as it were, in the land of the remaining clans, so that today, although they are regarded as a single top segment, their own subsegments are territorially discontinuous, just as Aith Turirth, Timarzga and Aith 'Arus are in relation to their "brothers" of Aith Yusif w 'Ari, Aith 'Ari and Aith Hadhifa, respectively.

[613] In time, also, the majority of the Imrabdhen came to fight among themselves, and only a very few (such as the lineage of the Iziqqiwen of Aith Hishim, the direct descendants of Sidi Mhand u Musa, himself in turn a direct descendant of the clan's apical ancestor, Sidi Ibrahim al-A'raj, and the lineage of the Dharwa n Sidi r-Hajj Mis'aud in Aith Turirth) retained the traditional occupations and prerogatives of holy men: the wearing of white robes, the adjudication of disputes, and the dispensing of baraka (which, it might be added, could only be inherited 614 by one son of any given holy man at a time). In the overall, permanent
616 liff alignment within the Aith Waryaghar, however, they did not waver
182 in their allegiance to the Aith Yusif w 'Ari. We are thus faced with 792 the paradox that although functionally they helped, as holy men, to restore or maintain equilibrium within the tribe, they created at the same time a structural disequilibrium by virtue of being, literally, "fifth wheels"--for such a relationship as exists between the segmentary and liff systems of the Aith Waryaghar is tenuous and non-integrative, as, in effect, it adds two and two together and makes five. (It is also possible to draw a similar analogy, in terms of balance and imbalance, between holy and adjudicating imrabdhen, the 10% minority, and lay and warrior imrabdhen, the 90% majority, although this is essentially another
614 matter. So, in fact, is the problem of the "legitimacy" of the Imrab-
792 dhen as a clan: whether they are shurfa or not--and here again, one runs into ambiguities. They themselves say "yes", while others say "no". In general, their genealogies seem to indicate that they are genuine shurfa, although it is possible that these are, at least in part, cleverly faked. Perhaps a test question here is whether or not they have a right to share in the annual proceeds of the sunduq or box

2. THE INTER-LINEAGE PACT[9] (AITH WARYAGHAR):

A) Qanun:

671
628
613
728
[796]

Praise be to God...With the prolongation and extenuation of fire and discord between the sons of the celebrated saint Sidi 'Amar Bu Yawryan al-Yusifi al-Jilmami al-Ghalbzuri[10] of the subsegment (lit. farqa) of the Awlad Ukidar, and of that of the Awlad bin 'Abdallah, with the subsegment of al-'Aziz bin Muhammad, their allies, their partisans among the Awlad Tahir Asrih al-Hishami, their patrilateral cousin the Murabit Sayyid Muhammad bin al-Hajj 'Amar and their brother's sons supporting him, an intercession was initiated between both parties through which they desired to obtain the recompense of God by means of good acts, asking the two parties to incline toward reconciliation, which God qualifies by good work and promises to reward whomsoever puts it into practice; then they decided to initiate it for the space of one year from the present date until the same date of the following year.

In consequence, the first party, composed of the Faqih Muahammad Ashahbar Ukidar, his brothers by his father, his patrilateral cousins the Awlad bin 'Abdallah, such as his brother's son Hammu bin 'Abdallah, etc., appeared for judgment; after this, the second party, consisting of al-'Aziz bin Muhammad, his father's brother Akuh, the patrilateral cousin of both the aforementioned, the Siyyid Muhammad bin al-Hajj 'Amar, his brother's son and those of his party as well as those supporting the aforementioned second party of the subclan of Isrihan, the Awlad Tahir Asrich, such as Muhammad bin 'Aisa bin Tahir and all his patrilateral cousins, also appeared for judgment; they came to

671 agree to the abovementioned truce for one year starting from the present
628 date. All of them appeared for judgment in front of the shiyukh of the 613 Wednesday Market (Suq al-Arba') which exists in the vicinity of Sidi
728 Abu al-'Afif; attendance at this act was completely general, as there
[443] also came notables such as the blessed, distinguished and excellent
[686] sharif Sidi Ahmad the son of the celebrated saint Sidi Misa'ud, from whose grace God has let us avail ourselves; al-Hajj Haddu bin Tahir al-'Abbasi; the shiyukh of Ajdir; the shiyukh of the Murabitin al-Jilmamiyin; and all in general, each of the parties arranging that in case either of them should break off the aforementioned truce in any way before the stipulated time of one year has elapsed, it shall pay a fine of 2000 duros (i.e. 20 x 100) to the shiyukh.

671 After responding with their goods and estates to the completed
628 arrangement, it was put into effect in the presence of the aforemen-
613 tioned shiyukh in the latters' shop in the aforementioned market; and it was accepted in full and in good faith, with neither party having the right to retract in either the present or the future, each one of them making itself responsible for the fulfillment of what has been set down and for which only those mentioned here have the responsibility.

(The obligation to) payment (of the fine) and the agreement are both complete, as indicated. (The undersigned witnesses) have testified to the testimonial capacity of everyone concerned, that on this day, in the interior of the aforementioned shop, each person concerned, among those known by sight and name, is of sound mind and memory and thus
[805] capable of testifying. On the first Wednesday of Rabi' al-Awwal of the Prophet, in the year 1335 (December 27, 1916).[11]

B) Commentary:

671 182 We have here a curious (sic) type of qanun, which, as we read it, reveals the decomposition which Rifian society had reached, the atomism to which its tribal anarchy led, the imperfection, or rather, the inefficacy, of its laws, the irregular coexistence, the demonstration of its independence.

628 613 728 The disputes between two lineages of the Aith Waryaghar threaten to exterminate them through the chain of blood-vengeance in the face of the indifferent attitude of their constituents, who are habituated to taking justice into their own hands in order to defend their own interests. Two rival groups of equal size attain, in their ferocious and persistent struggle, an equal number of losses, and they reach a stage of weariness, a moment of lassitude happily exploited in order to initiate a treaty of peace (author's italics), which will permit them to build up their resources; and this fact leads them to establish this agreement for one year. Those who will (686) see to it that the truce is kept are the shiyukh, to whose protection they submit and who are interested in the affair because of the inducement of the fine which the group must pay, if within this minimal space of time it contravenes what has been agreed upon in any way (author's italics).

671 613 628 728 554 This society lacks a strong executive power; it looked instinctively toward the web of lineages represented through its shiyukh or old chiefs (sic) (no one should believe that this title represented a step in any framework of governmental or judicial power) for a force which was neutral to its feuds and more powerful than itself, to which 671 613 628 728 554 by such a simple and voluntary act it was converted at the same time to an arbiter of incidents and an executor of decisions. The function is not gratuitous as in modern states, for if in the latter the contributor pays indirectly, he does so directly in the Rif. Their covetousness thus awakened, they evidently insured temporarily against feud renewal, but they also stipulated that it would revive the embers of their hatred.

671 613 628 182 [183] These agreements or inter-lineage truces obeyed a double mechanism originating from the vicious circle in which they were debated. On the one hand they originated a series of regulatory norms of coexistence which, gaining in amplitude of concept and extending their jurisdiction to the generalizing of their advantages and the persistence of their exemplarity, painfully came to gain the adhesion of other nearby and related lineages until they were adopted by larger social and territorial units, including districts or entire tribes; and this situation gave rise to some of those qanuns upon which we will comment further on. On the other hand, they represented the ultimate [728] [195] step to which anarchy led, responding to those most curious periods of their history in which one powerful group, having recourse to violence, broke the truce in defense of its own interests, the official recognition of this fact being given by the imgharen in the suq in the face of general consternation, with the tragic phrase War dha bu r-haqq.[12]

628 602 182 195 "Now there is no law"[13]: such was the official form of declaring the state of anarchy into which the Rifians so frequently fell, a phrase which obliged them to strengthen their kin group, without dismay and by all means in their power; for a man's kinsmen were his last refuge in case of social accident.

195 181 628 "Now there is no law" was repeated in the humble dwellings perched upon the heights; and soon the Rifian mountains regained their harsh, untranquil and agitated life, the bloody phantasmagoria of vengeance spreading again over the slopes through the cries of victims and the echo of gunshots.

628 613 619 134 But the instinct of self-preservation again prevailed, first with pacts like the above, allying small lineages, and afterwards with pacts which, as will be shown later, forced whole tribes into more or less long pauses, during which they took a breathing spell in their rude and savage struggle for existence, which was complicated to an extraordinary degree by a poor and ungrateful soil.

443 182 The reader will appreciate the importance which the market has in Rifian society, for it is not just a simple place of weekly commerce.....

443 671 182 [648] The market in Rifian society is the preferential institution, the role of which, in my opinion, has today (1939) been partly absorbed by the Office of Native Affairs[14] and by the mahkamas or tribunals where the law can be laughed at much more easily than it can be in the market, under a carob tree in full view of all, the market to which the Rifians are so addicted and about which the qudat (pl. of qadi) are so refractory, the market which is today free of all control, including that of its constituents, the most efficacious control of all.[15]

443 671 That the market, among Rifians, was the temple of law, of Parliament....is proven by the fact that in all markets laws were made through pacts, referenda and proclamations; and these unfortunately lack sanction through official publication. In it public affairs of general

671 [443] interest were discussed; in the suq resolutions of more importance were made by significant individuals, more important than the place which gave them a legal character.

Thus, in order to be valid, agreements and decisions had to conform to the following conditions: 1) agreement of the imgharen[16]; 2) necessity of a witness of exceptional character (a personality of religious significance, known and respected throughout the district); 3) registry by the tulba; and 4) proclamation in the suq. The above seems to be the mechanism of Rifian law.[17]

443 671 614 And in the suq a double character may be seen: place of business and temple of law, the latter more important than the former, because if it were the other way around, each clan would have various market sites and not just one, it seems to us; and furthermore, some clans, by virtue of their commercial topography would have been lacking in markets, which is also not the case.[18] Thus we believe, as stated in the first part of this work[19], that there is a correspondence between the clan as a social unit and the suq; in fact, we may go so far as to say that the former was the real fatherland (patria) of the Rifian, his political unit, a small independent republic, the distinctive feature of which was the suq, the temple of Rifian law.

671 Isaghwan[21] with (the) Awlad Siddiq[22], in the Wednesday Market (Suq
628 al-Arba') of Tawrirt, in the presence of their notables (Blanco:
613 note 2), agreeing there (to fulfill what has been pacted among them)
682 that anyone who should kill another by treachery or cunning (Blanco: note 3) shall pay a great fine, the amount of which (may) be as high as 4000 duros. This was also agreed to in their Saturday Market (Suq al-Sabt) in front of the notaries of both parties.

On the betrayal and killing (Blanco: note 4) by the abovementioned Awlad Siddiq of Shu'aib bin al-Hajj 'Amar, the notables of both the abovementioned markets, accompanied by the rest of the people, went to their villages to look for them, camping there until the latter paid (Blanco: note 6), although they (e.g. the Awlad Siddiq) had agreed to this in their presence and in their abovementioned market (when the agreement took place) with respect to the fine expressed above (Blanco: note 7). Upon not finding any solution which would save them except that of handing over to them all their lands, both in the mountains and in Ait 'Aisa, their houses and their documents (Blanco: note 8), with which they remained free of the pressure which the notables and the rest of the people exercised over them (they opted for surrender).

[792] Then, everything which they handed over was valued at 1300 duros (Blanco: note 9) and after the estimate was made, the notables of both markets, including (Blanco: note 10) the sharif Sidi Ahmad bin Sidi al-Hajj Misa'ud[23], al-Hajj bin al-Hajj Am'awsh al-Tawrirti, 'Allal bin Haddu bin al-Hashimi u l-Fari (of the Axt Tuzin), Haddu bin Muhammad Amzyan al-Bu Khalafi[24], al-Talib al-Bukhamad al-Yunusi, Tuhami bin

671 al-Faqir Siddiq al-'Arusi, Muhammad ibn Tahra, Sidi Musa ibn al-Hajj
628 Sayyid 'Amar Tahtahi, Muhammad bin Bu Hammud Mulaidi; al-Hajj Sidi
613 Misa'ud al-Manduri; Sa'id bin al-Hajj Haddu al-Ufari, Muhammad bin
682 al-Faqir Muhammad bin al-Hajj Ahmad al-Barzi, Muhammad Bu Shu'an, and [792] the rest of the notables of Tzurakhth (Blanco: note 11) sold all that was handed over to them to the brothers of the murdered man for the above sum, converting it into money.

(Blanco: note 12) The amount stated above was levied and the quantity (literally, price) was divided into four parts: 300 duros for the lineage of Izzugwaghen; the same for the Awlad al-Hajj 'Amar; the same for the Awlad Muhammad bin Muh bin al-Hajj Muhammadi al-Tazurakhti; and 150 duros for the Awlad Ahmad bin Taimunt (to be split) with Muhammad bin Tah, and the same for Muhammad bin Taimunt bin Misa'ud (to be split) with the Awlad Hammu Kabghith. One hundred (100) duros were divided in half between the son of Bukhalif, that is, Siddiq, and 'Abd al-Qadir Hashsha'.

(Blanco: note 13) Each of the abovementioned parties shall divide with its brothers (i.e. those of the same jurisdiction) the amount which it has exacted and with regard to the quantity of the same.

671 An irrevocable and non-retractable sale, effected (Blanco:
628 note 14) for repression and exemplary punishment. The sellers having 613 levied the total of the abovementioned sum, in the upper part of the
681 present qanun, from the hands of the buyers cited above, thus liberating 432 the sellers from all actions or reclamation regarding this matter and the above-cited buyer thus occupying (the lands) instead of the sellers, as his share. That is to say, occupying the place of the owner in the land, of the land which he buys and that of the owner of immovable property in that belonging to him, in conformance with traditional law.[25]

Those who attended the present (act) brought their testimony to the above according to the requirements of the interested parties. --In the middle of Jumad al-Awwal of the year 1336 (February 27, 1918). --The 'adl, Muhammad bin Muhammad bin al-Hajj al-Warnuri.--Another, whose name is not known.--Another, Muhammad bin Sidi 'Abd al-Qadir al-Ghazri.

B) Commentary:

The social disintegration which Rifian society has reached is proven by these individual agreements between dharfiqin (Blanco: note 1, corresponding to text of qanun). In the face of helplessness or irregular functioning of higher-level associations, the poor tribesmen, before falling into complete anarchy, hastened to conclude an agreement with a neighboring group in order to attenuate that anarchy, succeeding in the hard struggle for life on a poor soil. These agreements thus formed true islets of irregular and variable peace, anchored in functional (sic) anarchy.

The necessity of agreements between lower-level lineages, who were abandoned by the rudimentary organization, obeyed, according to my understanding, those most curious periods which followed the public declaration of anarchy in the suq, when one powerful group managed by force to sustain the punishment, breaking the truce.

As the dispute was generalized between two preponderant rivals, the unaffected groups, before falling into anarchy, and with that notable instinct of self-defense, worked to bring about these agreements,

628 a guarantee of peace which, little by little, by virtue of their 613 acceptance by new and neighboring dharfiqin, came to be converted into 728 a general agreement between clans, thus increasing the radius of 614 peace; or they even inspired them to adhere once more to an interrupted truce.

628 "There is no law", the ingharen announced through the mouth of 616 the market crier, and the poor tribesmen, loading their faithful and [195] inseparable companions, their rifles, were pressured into forming the [203] ranks of a liff, and into working out guarantees or neighboring alliances, such as that which we shall examine, which, for greater efficacy, publicity and solemnity, they proclaimed in front of their notables in the suq (parliament--sic), rendering them necessary and valid for fulfillment (Blanco: note 2, in text).

671 These agreements had no other legal connotation than the very
628 short one of holding off the next spark of vengeance, being disrupted
728 or broken, due to the good will of trying to serve (Blanco: note 14) for repression and as an example of punishment, their efficacy being that of lengthening the brief periods of peace.

829 This is a rational mechanism. Everybody understood that war
721 would exterminate him; everybody desired to be at peace. But in their [182] independent-minded democracy, they did not hit the mark with an organ of enforcement capable of imposing it, if anyone tried to disturb it.

671 Tired of tragic bloodfeuding, they drew up a truce and, logi-
628 cally, nominated the most powerful (man) to guarantee it and watch
728 over it.

671 628 613 728 Things went well, while the violators of the past were humble figures among the allied groups, incapacitated by their slight strength and the fact that they had few friends to abuse the pact by opposing themselves to other groups concerned; but when the equilibrium was upset or broken by the hatreds of the more distinguished lineage members, dragging their powerful lineages into the fray, the pact was wrecked and peace disappeared anew.

671 628 728 Observe in note 1 the guarantee of peace. In note 2, the formality of the agreement obtained. In note 3, the punishment. In note 4, the violation of the agreement. In note 5, the executive organ, the mass of the population. In note 6, the procedure. In note 7, the reason for the punishment, because it is a voluntary law. In notes 8 and 9, the fulfillment. In notes 10 and 11, the notables, the really significant personages, the Aitharbi'in. In notes 12 and and 13, with economic details, the democratic sensation of defective practice. In note 14, the Rifian illusion.

671 628 152 Notes 3 and 4 seem to show that Rifian custom is not designed to punish the loyal combatant, who, in an inflamed dispute, comes impulsively to make use of arms, incapable of dominating his instincts and always quick to defend his rights, but also to avoid treachery, cunning and hatred, or rather, vengeance, reprisal, from which the Rifians did not know how to free themselves, and which used up men and families. This is a notion which renders honors to manhood and stigmatizes the coward.

554 671 In notes 2, 10 and 11 it may be seen who the Rifians of significance are and that only these men, and not the ordinary tribesmen, are the executives and legislators. This proves what has been said

671 It may also be seen that here there appear no Arabic names of tribal functionaries, such as qa'id, qadi or mqaddim.

[693] The notaries who sign the documents limit themselves, then, to the registry of acts passed by the lay committee or customary tribunal.[27]

000 This procedure clarifies the executive prpcedure in notes 5, 6, 7 and 8.

627 613 The notables and a coterie of friends, family or volunteers, or, simply, hungry men, fall like locusts upon the households of the lineage-mates (agnates) of the accused, and they do not budge until the matter is settled; either this, or they throw them out of doors.[28] Documents and lands, proofs and possessions; the accused's agnates must hand over all of these, as well as their very houses. They have violated the pact and the pledged word. They can only save their own [628] persons, and this with difficulty, thanks to the force of vengeance, bloodfeud and reprisal, to the raqba[29], which may be taken by any member of the victim's family (i.e. any of the victim's agnates).

627 It is a rapid procedure, but not because the law or its executive organs are rapid, for, as among Europeans, as it is their own flesh which suffers, they are in no great hurry. In the Rif, the man who most strongly urges liquidation of these affairs is the one responsible for the crime, and his agnates. However, much beforehand accounts may be adjusted, the matter is over before they will see themselves free of the locusts in their quarters and before they will be able to save bread. After a few days, which are hard to stretch out, the provisions, already considerably reduced, will begin to get 627 very scarce and will soon give out altogether.

627 This period is that of smoothing over. Those responsible hide
614 their possessions, assure (the imgharen) that they have nothing, only a goat and a cow and a tiny plot of land: this is all they can offer, along with their house. The rest had been mortgaged[30], etc. The imgharen, sure in their convictions, do not agree....The members of the victim's family deny having any more possessions.

The neighbors of those responsible for the crime who are also obliged to put up lodgers become impatient and denounce possible concealments. The imgharen continue without deciding, and then their buying begins. Finally a moment arrives in which they hear no more offers or denunciations of those responsible for the crime. All, including the coterie, grumble, become tired and begin to desert, finally going back 627 to their homes. The notables, satiated and fed up, see that this is 614 the time to stop in the struggle and investigations, because of what
613 they hurried to auction when it was taken over, the gross value of which they distribute equally among the lineages concerned in the
[594] agreement, except for that of the man who violated it. This distribution, which the representatives of the lineages present parcel out among their lineage-mates, must in turn be parcelled out by the latter among the nuclear families, and by these among the members of each
[262] family. And thus, one fine day, the imgharen and their numerous coterie, nourished with barley, bread, butter and hard-boiled eggs, abandon those places which they have left as clean as the palms of their hands; for Rifian notions of justice are now satisfied and the lineage responsible for the crime remains in misery.

695 Valid and complete testimony in virtue of which both instrumental witnesses bring testimony against them.

800 (Two illegible signatures follow.)

692 At the same time, they agreed that whoever should commit any of the wrongs (literally, "things") expressed herein, the case, together with him (the man who committed it) shall be taken to Sayyid Mhammad bin Musa[32] and Sayyid Ahmad bin 'Ali[33] (Blanco: note d).

685 Whoever enters an orchard with intent to rob shall pay 20 uqiyyas. If a bull should start to trample property adjacent to that 685 672 of its owner, the latter shall pay one peseta.

The guarantors (of the fulfillment of this agreement) are three. The Muqaddam Muhammadi bin Muhammad bin Ahmad, Hammu bin Muhammad bin 'Ali bin 'Abdallah, and Muhammad bin 'Umar bin Ahmad bin al-Hasan (Blanco: note e).

[681] Regarding the amount (of the fines imposed) with respect to orchards in cases in which they are injured by animals, this will be donated to their mosque (Blanco: note f).

If they should break a branch of a fig or other tree belonging to anyone, the owner of the animals will pay 20 (uqiyyas).

800 A signature in Arabic follows, which appears to be al-Bu Jma' bin Muhammad (signed).

B) Commentary:

671 624 The reading of this qanun clearly indicates in its first paragraph the names of those who have established it, all of them members of the jma'th of Imhauren, bordering the Island of Alhucemas, in the plain of the same name. Every two or three headmen or iziddifen (sing., 624 613 554 aziddif, "head") are the visible representatives of the lineage groups

621 which make up the said jma'th; they are at the same time the most 613 influential and respected members of the community. Without any 554 presidency, without rigid formalities, without oceans of ink or [182] ridiculous voting techniques, this democracy of lineages, galled by necessity and convenience, knows how to unite the established social norms which have to regulate, in what follows, the relations between the different lineages.

671 It is thus a people's law, made by representatives of the 621 community, surrounding the act in which it is originated with all
181 the guarantee and formality for the satisfaction of the always suspicious mass and for the possible waylaying (in ambush) of its repre-
792 sentatives. For this, and as a guarantee, a greater solemnity and 621 public knowledge, two holy men are invited to and attend the meeting;
692
554 they will keep the session from degenerating into a dispute because of the prestige which they enjoy, for the conclusion of the agreement, under which they place themselves, assures their guard and divine benediction. Even the most exigent will remain satisfied, closing the 792 road to backbiting. Even more, in order to avoid forgetfulness or 621 capricious modifications in matters of such transcendence, they draw
692
212 it up in writing; it is easy to understand the genesis of the agreement
671 and the development of the session in which it is taken. From that 527 time to this, it is public feasting, a subject for all the commentaries
521
571 in the village (households, watering places for women, and mosques), such as the numerous thefts in and damages to the orchards, the harvests of which are ready and which they fear will be wasted; these are events which are repeated every year at the same time and for which they are obliged to assemble in order to keep them down.

000 they are obliged to assemble in order to keep them down. Furthermore,
437 we may see the alarming case in which the commercial transactions of
556
152 some individuals with the Island of al-Husaima undergo a considerable increase; their gains, fabulously augmented through envy and general misery, permit their rivals to throw doubts and suspicion on the real origin of their opulence; having no other source of wealth, the latter impute frightful treacheries to them. Perhaps a bloodfeud or an
628
177 accusation deprived more than one Amhaw (sing. of Imhawren) of a large Spanish pension from the above island[34].....All this and the constant
613
623 inter-lineage hatreds charged the atmosphere in such a way that somebody had the idea, eagerly grasped by the rest, to hold a meeting in order to put an end to such a calamitous state of affairs.

623 When the date is established and has arrived, the meeting is held, without discussion of anything other than details, for in the preparatory work, as we have said, the participants have already reached the stage of assembling their criteria. There is no delay in expressing whatever must be considered a crime, nor even in the type and importance of the punishment, for as all of them committed sins or hoped for an occasion to do so, they had to establish a moderate punishment under a savage exterior, and, above all, a guarantee of not becoming enveloped in bloodfeuds.

623 For this reason, the popular assembly makes a collective and 687 graphic insult (Blanco: note b, in text), although afterwards this is 685 limited to a fine (Blanco" note c, in text) of fairly sizeable proportions which is imposed upon the smuggler and informer from al-Husaima Island or on a thief, in place of exterminating him. Thus public

623 Thus public
182 esteem and the ideas which such deeds provoke in others are regained;
673 they satisfy the mass of the people without having to resort to cru-
687 elty, for....in a truly humane feeling, note c in the text shows that 685 the author of the crime must have been caught in flagrante delicto.
627 Discounting possible vengeance and not very sure of having succeeded in 623 doing so, note e in the text shows the institution of a popular tri-
554 bunal formed by two neutral individuals, two men who neither take part 671 in the agreement nor are members of the jma'th, but the fact that they have prestige in it is a maximum guarantee of the workability of the qanun in question.

623 Furthermore, the jma'th as a social unit is personified not in 621 its mqaddim, in the Arab manner, but, hostile to personal power, in a triumvirate formed by three of the legislators who took part in the meeting and who remain obligated to watch over the fulfillment of the agreement. This executive organ of power is made up of laymen, and it as much as the aforementioned tribunal is the result of popular election.

691 In the few lines which this qanun has, aside from creating a
624 a code, a tribunal and a police force, all of which are, naturally,
182 gratuitous, it creates a rural exchequer, and all this with a good, natural and admirable feeling.

182 It restricts, through fear of fines, damages to the small social 671 unit it represents by guaranteeing the safety of property and discard-
626 ing cravings for economic expansion at the expense of member lineages.[35]
681
613

691 It creates lineage authorities whose jobs are gratuitous, and,
613 always suspicious, it avoids concentration of power in the hands of one
661 person, a fact which permits neither a shade of tyranny by the latter
182 nor a bastardization of his office.

682 limits of his land (i.e. within the limits of the clan territory of the Bani 'Abdallah) shall pay (a fine of) 2000 duros; (this shall be the fine) if he committed the deed alone; but if several (men) committed it, each one (shall pay a fine of) 2000 duros. Whoever should take 687 683 justice into his own hands (literally, "rahsacking to collect a debt") shall pay 50 duros, and the same for whoever should attack another on 689 the path. Whoever should provoke an incident in the market (shall pay) 10 duros.

683 (Blanco: note d) Whoever should unsheath a dagger, making it glitter, with intent to attack (literally, "injure"), shall pay 5 duros. Whoever should wound the head of another with stones (shall pay) 5 duros. Whoever should attack another with a stick, causing blood to flow and provoking a scandal, (shall pay) 15 duros, and if he should not cause blood to flow, (he shall pay) 10 duros.

613 (Blanco: note e) Whoever should come to the defense of one of 681 his brothers (i.e. agnates) or of any other person, as is customary among those of the same party (i.e. same lineage), (shall pay) 5 duros.

681 (Blanco: note f) No request (for pardon) shall be listened to, nor shall mercy be granted to any of those who have incurred the above (punishments).

805 (Blanco: note g) For the application of what has been made 443 manifest above, it shall be considered that Tuesday begins at dawn and ends with the sunset; this is to apply to them (those of the Bani 'Abdallah) and for strangers (regarding the application of the above), market (day) shall be considered as having a duration of three days.

695 With regard to the above, the testimony (which both 'udul) 693 registered took place, the witnesses being in a perfect state of legal

671 794 212 In these childish (sic) legislators we may observe the suspicions and fears which the poor tulba plant with their confused drafts of these qanuns, drafts which they never succeed in becoming satisfied about; for they see themselves bound to the impossibility of correcting their vague and hazy language and can only modify it with addenda which for the most part only give rise to new and further confusions. But this is not the fault of the man who grasps his rifle, but rather of him who wields the pen.

We see in this clan qanun how it refuses to concern itself with matters that fall within the exclusive competence of the jma'th, which has its own independent life[50], as the final step of Berber anarchy (sic). Thus, for example, it says nothing about irrigation, orchards or fields, hospitality, education, grazing lands, collecting and gathering, etc., and neither does it enter into private rights, personal and successoral law. It limits itself, rather, to regulating the coexistence of its component jma'ths, lineages and individuals in the only places where they come together (i.e. markets).

671 183 It is also to be seen that the social or public law which this qanun represents is inspired by norms which are more elevated through the non-admission of compensation, such as blood-spilling, in cases of common prestige (murder in the market) without, at the same time, ceasing to be inspired by norms more humanitarian than the private rights admitted by vengeance and reprisal, to which the codes of social units like this one are opposed,....

671 614 613 182 So that, while the qanuns of clans tend toward the clans' preservation, they develop solidarity, and neutralize the rivalries of

671 component lineage groups, for the practices of such groups tend to 614 disintegrate them through the violent opposition of the individual
613 interests of their members. The clan officiates as a soothing in-
182 fluence on the disorderly appetites of the lineages, patrilineally and patrilaterally united by the strong tie of blood.[51]

671 7. QANUN OF THE AITH 'ADHIYA[52] (AITH WARYAGHAR)
693
695 A) Qanun:
623
621 Copy.--Praise be to God. In the presence of both the under-
782 signed notaries, all those of Bani 'Adhiya (properly, Bani 'Aziya) made testimony, both adults and minors (author's italics) who constitute the jama'as of the Ait Tazurakht, Ait ar-Rabda, Ait Kharbush, Ait Mnudh, Ait Ajdir, Ait (illegible)[53], Ait Ighmiren and Ait Fars, that they, when they went together to the tomb of the saint Sidi al-Hajj 'Umar, in ar-Rabda, sacrificed two bulls as an offering to him[54], (on the occasion of which) an act of reconciliation took place between them, with respect to murder, theft, pillage and other acts of this 682 kind. In case any of them should kill another, then all the above-
613 mentioned villages of the Bani 'Adhiya shall unite against him and burn his estate and that of his brothers (i.e. agnates); they shall drag them from their houses and exact from them a fine of 1000 duros.
682 This (shall be the case) if he should have killed outside the market[55]
443 or without witnesses (literally, "without a meeting"). In case he should kill someone in the market or in front of witnesses, then the procedure shall be as stated above, all uniting against him, burning his estate and that of his brothers (i.e. agnates), and taking from them, as a punishment against him, a fine of 2000 duros.[56]

628
681
184
443 1000 duros[60]; for the double amount of 2000 duros which appears in certain qanuns refers only to a single case and to the place in which the crime is committed--the suq, or tribal market.

681
619
443 In this single case the 2000-duro fine is imposed, and the reason is simple: the crime in these conditions and in this place reaches out to attack not only the prestige of the tribe but the common interests of Rifian society, and endangers them gravely; for, naturally, when news of the crime is spread by the regular constituents of the market, this keeps away the merchants from other places who have received word. This, in turn, brings about a commercial blockade (author's italics) of the tribe, which originates from insecurity of persons and property; for rare is the occasion that the tumult which murder and woundings bring about does not end up in pillage.

681 For this reason the Rifians saw themselves obliged to cut down rigorously and to threaten with heavy sanctions any crimes of this magnitude and kind, the gravest in the society. The ddiyith[61] is

628
682
614
619
443
613 therefore doubled in this case. We have here the reason, distinctly made, why, in my opinion 1000 duros must be established as the fine for homicide (a sanction which the clans of the Aith 'Abdallah and the Aith Bu 'Ayyash both establish and which we encounter in the ribat, or agreement, which allied such tribes as the Sanhajans of the Aith Siddath to the Aith Khannus, and the Bni Gmil to the Bni Bu Frah), and a further 1000 duros for homicide committed in the market; for the damage and disturbance affect not only a single lineage, but are prejudicial and shameful to the whole tribe, which by virtue of the laws of reprisal and blood-vengeance must fatten on any man who forgot his duties or obligations to it.

Aith Waryaghar

616
613 While relationships with one's own and neighboring lineages, regulated by tradition, were maintained, the liff did not plead permanence as a hope of reward, but whenever injustice or violence, ripping up their pact or norms of coexistence, left an individual or his lineage-mates helpless, these latter attained in the liff a final support for their rights and in all cases a secure material refuge for their persons and possessions.

616
779 The liff must not be compared to European political parties (author's italics), for these are activated under a religious aegis or under a governmental form, both things being ones which did not enter into the preoccupations of the Rifians, for whom republics and Islam were points which did not admit controversy even in the slightest degree. Destined to a rude struggle for existence in a harsh and miserable environment, the speculations of the spirit had neither place nor occasion to make themselves felt in the fact of the other, primordial and undeferable.

616
182 To any presumed victims the liff was the best guarantee and forewarning, as through it individuals and social units were forced to bring about the alliances (author's italics) which they deemed necessary in order to oppose adverse forces; and thus they insured their own existence.

616
619
182 The mechanism of the liff worked the miracle, in the anarchical (sic) state of Rifian society, of permitting the coexistence of the family or kin group or social unit (i.e. the lineage, on whatever level), as small as it might be, among others more numerous in point of population with no diminution of its integrity; and this fact permitted the

616
613 survival, up into our own time, of insignificant tribes, true Rifian
619 Switzerlands, authentic islets, like Thafarsith, which were sur-
182 rounded by powerful neighbors.

616 Thanks to such a mechanism, the individual within the family,
182 the family within the jma'th, the jma'th within the clan, the clan within the tribe, and the tribe within the area or region all attained an unstable equilibrium, but an equilibrium, nevertheless, from start to finish, the most curious facet of which was expressed in the linkage of clans and in the two great rival bands of the Ghmara and the Sinhaja.

616 I am unable to determine whether the liff was the cause or
121 the result of the fractionization which Rifian anarchy brought about, populating the mountains with a real mosaic of small autonomous states which were grouped into two rival bands and equilibrated thanks to the linkage of the liff system.[102] Many reasons could be given for one or the other theory.

616 It is certain that the liff, in the Rifian ethos, is a mysterious and powerful force, to which the tribesmen submitted body and soul, if one might say so without necessarily admitting a comparison of European methods of alliance.[103]

671 This qanun offers further proof in support of the fact that the 614 clan in the Rifian mountains was an autonomous state within the tribe.
619 Thus, as in this case, we see it brought together with the neighboring 644 clans of another tribe (Bni Gmil), regarding the subject of war on the 648 border, while its members either forget or eschew union with another clan of their own tribe (Swahil of Bni Bu Frah)[104]; according to European modes of thought, such an action would induce a lack of esteem

312 uggugen) for the source or origin of irrigation ditches and as partitions of the waters on both banks. After a dam has been set up, built to hold as much water as possible, it is converted into a ditch-head, in which the necessary outlets are made, and it thus acts as the point of origin of the principal or primary ditches which have a permanent flow of water; these are usually two or three in number. Although [183] these outlets are irregular, the Rifians say that a half or a third of the water is utilized in distribution; and although this is what happens in practice, in theory the distribution is far from perfect, as the tribesmen do not take into account the width nor the depth of the outlets; and these are improvised, if not actually variable. The primary ditches are distributed and divided in this way into secondary branches, if these are necessary, in which the irrigation turns proper are initiated, which means that they only take up water for twenty-four hours; therefore, if there are four secondary ditches, each one [805] will take up water every four days. These secondary ditches are subdivided in turn into other tertiary branches, also of periodic or intermittent flow, which do not take up water other than during the day or at night; and these originate the irrigation furrows of individuals which do not take up any water other than at certain hours, which are determined by those of the principal daily prayers.

312 591 613 596 This distribution of irrigation water is intimately linked to the Rifian lineage system, to the dharfiqth (which tends to have a 24-hour turn) and its component ijujga, and it is completed with one order of turns begun in the tertiary ditches through which if one of these ditches, during its turn, takes up water during the daytime,

312 571 [613] [596] in the following turn it will take it up at night, and with another order among the irrigators in which the first in one turn will be the last in the next. These two classes of turns, this order of irrigation, is usually set up for the whole duration; when it is begun, the irrigators draw lots with small sticks or twigs, and, at other times, it is set up differently every day. The transfer of

312 571 425 [432] [805] [435] turns is free, as is the decision of the person to be favored. Turns of water are the object of buying and selling, and are independent of land. A 12-hour turn every week (eight days) comes to some 500 or 600 duros (1939).[124]

312 [821] The hour to begin irrigating is that of the rising or setting of the sun, according to whether the turn itself is diurnal or nocturnal. The repairs depend on their importance and where they are made, the users of the branch in question contributing to these, downstream. The outlets or cuts of water are the responsibility of the individual who is irrigating at the time. The duration of turns

312 571 805 was regulated by means of natural hours, those of the prayers, and by measurements of the shade and the angle of the same with some object, in other words, a true sun dial.

312 627 628 671 Differences were resolved, as noted, by means of arbitration, valuation or assessment, or indemnification, apart from governmental intervention if this is deemed necessary, as some qanuns express.

312 184 The variations in the treatment of ditches require the conformity of all the ditch-users to be expressed by themselves or their representatives personally, in a meeting convoked to this effect on the sites which are to be the objects of modification, in the system or traditions of irrigation.

It has a turn cycle of six days, which are distributed among the four lineages (dharfiqin), these in turn dividing their turns among their respective branches (ijujga), in the following order:

1st Day (24 hours): Ajdir (U Hammu; U Haddu)

2nd Day (24 hours): Ughir Iyizan (U Xikhrif; U Yihya u Musa)

3rd Day (24 hours): Ajdir (U Mis'aud u Yusif; W 'Alla w Ujdir)

4th Day (24 hours): Ughir Iyizan (U Dris; W 'Alla Ughir Iyizan)

5th Day (24 hours): Bu Mqathir

6th Day (24 hours): Zawith (Fisra and Andrusen--Ushannen--Ihaddallahan--Dharwa nd-Hajj 'Abdinnbi)[133]

On the seventh day, the sequence is repeated.

Sidd Dharga n-Bulma'iz: on the right bank. It begins, as does l-Bzimma, at Bu Harishen, crossing the river in order to divide its water with Dharga n Tfadhna, and each one of these three ditches receives one-third of the permanent flow taken in at Bu Harishen. It runs for a few kilometers and reaches the sea at Swani Waddai (Lower [402] Swani). It moves three mills, the first belonging to the Qa'id Sriman (r-Khattabi) and 'Abdinnbi, the second to I'arhuthen and the third to Dharwa nd-Hajj Si 'Ari Ubarru.[134]

It has a turn cycle of three days for the three dharfiqin indicated, and they in turn distribute the water among their ijujga, which make [805] them up in their own way. The turn begins at the maghrib, or sunset prayer.

1st Day (24 hours): Imhauren: Aith 'Aru Hmid
Aith 'Abdallah u Hmid
Aith Muhand u Hmid
Aith Bu Dhimmus (only when water is scarce)[135]

312

2nd Day (24 hours): Dhifirasin: Aith Mhand u Yihya
Im'aruwen[136]

3rd Day (24 hours): r-Hujjaj: Aith r-'Arbi
Dharwa nd-Hajj Si 'Ari Ubarru
I'arhuthen[137]

312
571

[596]

We thus have, in the regimen of the ditch with which we are dealing, an excellent example of Rifian solidarity, observable in the turn of the Imhauren, as in times of dryness or drought, when they need more themselves, they hasten to aid their neighbors of Aith Bu Dhimmus (who are ordinarily limited to their own turn of hours of irrigation in another ditch, that of Thafadhna, as we shall see later), although by this the other three lineage branches or ijujga only harm themselves, because they defer one of their own turns by nine more days, and even if the turn is a small one in itself, they only receive it once every nine days.

312
571

For a better understanding of the mechanics of irrigation among Rifians, we shall study in greater detail the order which is followed in this ditch[138], for it is curious to observe how they have simplified it, in spite of the modifications which are introduced in the case of the Aith Bu Dhimmus, for example, with its intermittent (author's italics) rights, so as not to interrupt the turn in general; but, at the same time, how can we explain the miracle of how the thousands of Rifian irrigators and the labyrinth of ditches which traverse the Plain of al-Husaima do not produce any disturbances nor give rise to any incidents other than those occasioned by ignorance on the part of the Europeans, of which the Rifians of importance sometimes try to take advantage or the avarice of the fortunately few and ill-named "colons"?

312
613

We may see the ingenuity with which they resolve the problem of irrigation during twenty-four hours in a three-day turn, the same to each of the lineages of the ordinary turn as to the nine days in the exceptional case of the Aith Bu Dhimmus.

Ordinary turn:

1st Day: Imhauren (24 hours)--Aith 'Aru Hmid

2nd Day: Dhifirasin (24 hours)--Aith Mhand u Yihya

3rd Day: r-Hujjaj (24 hours)--Aith r-'Arbi

4th Day: Imhauren (24 hours)--Aith 'Abdallah u Hmid

5th Day: Dhifirasin (24 hours)--Im'aruwen

6th Day: r-Hujjaj (24 hours)--Dharwa nd-Hajj Si 'Ari Ubarru

7th Day: Imhauren (24 hours)--Aith Muhand u Hmid

8th Day: Dhifirasin (24 hours)--Aith Mhand u Yihya (again)

9th Day: r-Hujjaj (24 hours)--I'arhuthen (I'abbuthen, probably)

10th Day: Imhauren (24 hours)--Aith 'Aru Hmid (again)

[596] And thus the turn is repeated, except for Dhifirasin, which with only two (irrigating) ijujga alternates between one and the other every time its turn comes around. We see here that in the ordinary turn the nubath (pl. of nubth, "turn") of Dhifirasin irrigate once every three days, while those of Imhauren and r-Hujjaj irrigate once every nine days. Now, if we insert Aith Bu Dhimmus into the picture, we see that Dhifirasin continues to irrigate once every three days and r-Hujjaj once every nine, both on the same day as before, while, on the other hand, because of this shift, Imhauren, to which dharfiqth the new irrigators belong[139], irrigates four out of five times once every nine days and once out of five times once every eighteen days, with the intercalated newcomers irrigating once every twelve days, as shown below, instead of the four lineages of Imhauren rotating every twelve days if they would have been given the right to irrigate with them.

613

We may observe that in reality, without any alteration of the general turn and without any injury to the other two neighboring dharfiqin which are slightly further away, the thirst of the Aith Bu Dhimmus is miraculously quenched, and how this happens:

1st Day: Aith Bu Dhimmus (Imhauren)--takes turn of Aith 'Aru Hmid

2nd Day: Aith Mhand u Yihya (Dhifirasin)

3rd Day: Aith r-'Arbi (r-Hujjaj)

4th Day: Aith 'Abdallah u Hmid (Imhauren)

7th Day: Aith Muhand u Hmid (Imhauren)

8th Day: Aith Mhand u Yihya (Dhifirasin)

9th Day: I'arhuthen (read I'abbuthen) (r-Hujjaj)

10th Day: Aith 'Aru Hmid (Imhauren)--recuperates its turn

11th Day: Aith Mhand u Yihya (Dhifirasin)

12th Day: Aith r-'Arbi (r-Hujjaj)

25th Day: Aith Bu Dhimmus (Imhauren)--takes turn of Aith Muhand u Hmid
26th Day: Aith Mhand u Yihya (Dhifirasin)
27th Day: I'arbuthen (read I'abbuthen) (r-Hujjaj)

And so on.[140] To attempt to vary this unending chain which the [182] irrigation turns of the Rifians make up in those ditches with permanent flow is to promote major altercations and to upset the equilibrium of the whole of the Plain of al-Husaima.

312 The simple attempt by a Rifian miller to divert for a few
571 seconds the water of Bufma'iz so that it would flow to his turbine mill,
402 I recall, provided the motive for a sudden and vehement protest by the 578 users of this ditch, en masse, to the authorities; the whole Plain of al-Husaima took alarm to such an extent that no procedure nor influence (on the part of the authorities) could be brought to bear toward the peaceful possibility that the people might acknowledge the man's alleged right; and, nevertheless, this Plain needs more than a concerted arrangement and ordination, an improvement and rectification of the principal ditches;[141] and above all it needs a possible increase of flow for the outlet of subterranean or subalveal waters.

613
(402)

Sidd Dharga n Tfadhna: on the right bank. It takes half the water from Bufma'iz, and therefore begins, as do the other two, in Bu Harishen, the permanent flow taking up one-third of the dam. It moves four mills: that of Muhammad Akuh and Si Muhammad Budra; downstream, that of Dharwa nd-Hajj Shiddi; the next, that of Dharwa n Hammu Taqar'aith, Qa'id Sriman (r-Khattabi) and Muhand nd-Hajj Hammu; and finally, that of Dharwa nd-Hajj Hammush.[142]

The turn is one of three days for the three dharfiqin using the ditch, and each lineage redistributes its twenty-four-hour flow as follows:[143]

1st Day: Yinn Si 'Amar Umrabit

2nd Day: Aith Bu Dhimmus (24 hours): Ajdir (12 hours)

Andrusen (2 hours 40 minutes or one-fifth)

Aith Bu Dhimmus (9 hours 20 minutes or four-fifths)[144]

(Andrusen and Aith Bu Dhimmus thus irrigate 12 hours between them)

3rd Day: Aith 'Aru Hmid (Imhauren) (24 hours): Aith 'Abdallah u Hmid

Aith Muhand u Hmid

Aith 'Aru Hmid

The Ghis also provides water for three other ditches before it empties into the sea: Tuth ("mulberry") and Hammam[145] on its left bank and Shimurra on its right; but they do not have a permanent flow like the others discussed above, nor for that matter is their regimen or capacity, which is somewhat arbitrary and subordinate to the others, well regulated, for an irrigator, during his turn, can, if he wants, 312 571 613 [402] lead the water to which he has a right in any of the main ditches into these three smaller ones. The ditch of Tuth, when it has water, moves the mill of Dharwa nd-Hajj Mis'aud. The irrigators of the Tafadhna ditch, whether the turn is interrupted or not, have the right to use that of Shimurra, but giving first choice to those who use it regularly.

16. QANUN OF THE NKUR RIVER (AITH WARYAGHAR):

312 675 The Nkur River has an irrigation regimen which is less exact than that of the Ghis, and the written agreements on the distribution of its waters are few and recent. One of them refers to the division of waters between the Axt Tuzin and the Aith Bu 'Ayyash, with the intervention of the Bureau of the Aith Waryaghar (in Ajdir).[146] In any case, the establishment of such agreements is based upon the same notions and the same norms as in those pertaining to the Ghis.A

312 [621] In the Middle and Upper Nkur, there is more than enough water to irrigate the meanders which the river has created, through which it is easy to affix by-laws to the 'azibs[147] of the neighboring jma'ths which own land on its banks, given the small amount of land under irrigation. [241] There is even freedom and waste, and it is not uncommon to see, during harvest time, the formation of tiny threshing floors with capricious irrigation-furrows of 300 and 500 meters in the middle of the river bed.

[619] There are meanders like Dhaghzwith n Dasa (upstream, in the territory of Axt Tuzin, and near the bridge on the right bank) and Dhazur-akhth (downstream, in the territory of the Aith Bu 'Ayyash, and also right beside the same bridge, but on the left bank), which are of relatively large dimension and which have already stabilized turns; but the real difficulties and concomitant near-perfect solutions are

A, [See pp. 361-369--Analyst]

000 which pertains to the agreement to which both these tribes came.

312 613 The flow taken up by the Aith Waryaghar bathes the meander of Sidi r-Hajj Yusif[161], and is used by the Aith Umnudh lineage of the subclan of the Aith 'Adhiya of the clan of the Aith Bu 'Ayyash. It is divided [571] into two turns of twenty-four hours each: one for the lineage branch of Aith Ishshu (some 80 irrigators) and the other for the lineage branch of "True" Aith Umnudh (some 130 irrigators).[162] The flow taken up by the Axt Tuzin (clan of the Axt 'Akki) is distributed through the Dharga n Tufdhisth.

312 [823] [103] Azru n Srith ("The Rock of the Bride"): This legendary site[163], the point of departure for water from the pond of Thanda Hawa, beside the tomb of Sidi Birqi, is the principal shed for the waters of the Nkur River, and four ditches flow from it: one on the left, or Aith Waryaghar, side, Dharga n Tufrashth, and three on the right, called Sunduq (Axt Tuzin), Sidd Asiyar[164] (Thimsaman) and Ihajjamen ("barbers") (Thimsaman), respectively.

Sunduq and Tufrasht divide water into equal parts. In turn, the Sunduq ditch, by the same token, divides it with Dharga Usiyar, and the latter, in turn, with Ihajjamen, which in time of scarcity has no water.

[571] [613] The turn cycle of Dharga n Tufrasht is five days for Izakiren and two for Ighmiren.[165]

Dharga Sidd 'Arridh: begins at the same height as Dharga Hadhidha, on the other (west) bank, and beside and just upstream from the crossing of the main Tetuan-Melilla road and the piste to the Thimsaman.[166]

000 66--The tomb of Sidi Bu 'Afif is located in Tafrast of the Aith Mhand n Yihya, near Ajdir, in the Aith Yusif w 'Ari. The market right beside it ceased to function after the establishment of the Spanish Protectorate.

[996] [732] 67--This saint, nicknamed Bu Rjila, "possessor of a small foot", because of his lameness, was a direct descendant of Sidi Mhand u Musa of Aith Hishim (Lower Imrabdhen). In his time, Sidi Hmid Bu Rjila, to call him as the Rifians do, was the most important saint among the lowlanders of Aith Waryaghar, and his ability both at adjudication of intra-tribal conflicts and at dispensation of baraka were legendary.

[613] [614] 68--Ajdir, or Aith Ujdir, forms a lineage unit within the subclan of the Aith Ughur Izan of the clan of the Aith Yusif w 'Ari, but not all the names which follow are those of the Aith Ujdir properly speaking.

69--This sum is only one-quarter of the usual amount for murder in the market; and we have unfortunately no explanation of why this should be the case.

70--A value judgment, of course, but not without amusement when taken in context.

71--The jillab is a cloak, formerly of wool but today often of cotton as well, with sleeves and hood, and is par excellence the Moroccan male garment.

72--Sneakers were perhaps commoner in the Rif as male footgear than any other type of shoe, in Spanish times.

[464] 73--What Blanco probably refers to by "forced internment" is that city Arabs have since Spanish times been found in tribal administration posts as white-collar workers, male nurses, etc.

[114] 74--This is hardly the case. Such city dwellers to be found in rural administration posts, in our experience, do their best not to imitate the tribesmen, who today are gradually becoming more urban, or more Westernized, in dress.

75--Blanco actually means aitharba'in rather than agraw in this particular context.

[113] 76--A concentric theory of community and/or tribal loyalties in Middle Eastern social structure has been elaborated by John Gulick, Social Structure and Culture Change in a Lebanese Village, Viking Fund Publications in Anthropology, New York 1955.

77--Ra'is in Arabic is "headman", from ras, "head".

[992] [113] 78--Mulay Admad al-Raisuli was a sharif from Bni 'Arus in the Jbala whose colorful career in the first quarter of the 20th century ranged from provincial governor to bandit, and whose story is most engagingly told by Rosita Forbes, The Sultan of the Mountains, New York: Holt, 1924. In early 1925, Raisuli was captured by 'Abd al-Krim and died in April of that year in Thamasind, in the heart of the Aith Waryaghar. He is buried in the village cemetery at Thamasind, and his grave, which we have seen, is in no way different from any of the others.

000 S [619] 95--The two tribes in question are Bni Bu Frah and Bni Gmil, the former a predominantly Rifian even though largely Arabic-speaking tribe, and the latter, also predominantly Arabic speaking, disclaimed by both the Rifians and the Sinhaja Srir.

R [613] 96--A lineage of the clan of Agni, of the Bni Bu Frah, this unit, as indicated by its name, came from the tribe of the Igzinnayen. It is the second of the two Rifian-speaking lineages of the Bni Bu Frah.

97--Two questions emerge here. First, the text refers to "both clans", when in actual fact Bni Bu Frah has four clans. This may, however, mean one of two things: a reference to Muhammad bin al-'Arbi, the Awlad Ghadura and their allies (Muhammad bin al-'Arbi and the Awlad Ghadura being considered as one clan and the allies as another), or it may in fact refer to the two liffs into which the tribe was split and thus embrace all four clans. The first, in context, seems more probable. This jibes with Blanco's statement, in the commentary (note 259), that the two clans in question are Agni and Ulad S'aid.

Secondly, we find, in the notion of payment for combatting their own people, a contradiction in terms. But this can probably be explained away by the fact that what this statement (which is highly unclear) probably refers to is that those who stay on the tribal border and combat any of their tribal brethren who try to evade the collective obligation by sneaking home are indeed exempt from payment of any fine, because their conduct has been exemplary.

R [613] [619] S [619] One further point: the fact that lineages from every clan of the Bni Bu Frah are mentioned in this border agreement suggests the total involvement of the tribe as well as, implicitly, that of all of the Bni Gmil; for in small tribes, such involvement is total, whereas in large ones, such as the Aith Waryaghar or the Igzinnayen, this may not be (and indeed often is not) the case.

R [613] [614] S [619] 98--Even so, lineages from the other two clans of the Bni Bu Frah, Swahil and Ibuyihyathen, also appear to have been involved (see text of qanun); and presumably all or most of the Bni Gmil was involved as well, though this is nowhere stated in the text.

99--The mobility of tribal borders to which Blanco alludes here was quite relative; and it was far less great than, for instance, that among desert Bedouins, or even transhumants.

100--The liff system is perhaps a center-piece in Rifian political organization; but it is not the only one. There are other institutions with almost equal claims to primacy, such as the plural oath.

101--The liff system did bind together different social units, but always, let it be remembered, those of the same order or level of segmentation--unless, for example, a shift in alliance occurred, in which case it was possible for a liff to move upward or downward (in a structural sense) in gaining or losing new adherents.

It will be noted that the bulk of Blanco's commentary on liffs here is substantially the same as his chapter on the same subject in Der. Cons. Rif.

600 102--Whether by this Blanco is referring to the two rival bands within a tribe (i.e. the Rifian liff system as described in successive notes in Book 2) or to the rival bands of Ghmara and Sinhaja he does not specify; but we suspect the reference is to the latter, and we have already put our own view on this subject forward elsewhere.

103--As they could also, no doubt, for the theory of whether liffs start wars or stop them.

[C13] 104--An examination of the segmentation of the Bni Bu Frah shows us that lineages from all four of the tribal clans are in fact parties to the border defense agreement.

105--It is not clear from the original mss. whether by "least clear or tangible" Blanco refers to the tribe of the Bni Bu Frah or to the aspects of Rifian political organization under consideration.

106--Once again: for ddiyith, read rhaqq. This consistent howler becomes tiresome!

107--A somewhat similar situation, although born of quite different circumstances, is revealed in a tripartite qanun dated 1909 and translated and commented upon by Manuel Llord O'Lawlor ("Un Canon Bereber Tripartito", Tamuda, IV, 2, 1957, pp. 305-309), which involves an agreement between two Ghmaran tribes, Bni Smih and Bni Grir, and one "Rifian" (by default, as it is entirely arabic-speaking) tribe, Mtiwa, to establish a ribat in the harim or sacred territory surrounding the tomb of Sidi Yahya al-Wardani in Mtiwa; for Sidi Yahya is regularly visited every year, in mid-August, by all the surrounding tribes.

108--The punishment for whoever does not obey the order in question is not stated.

109--Literally, "big man of the military expedition"; under 'Abd al-Krim it referred to a top commander of tribal levies, rather than Rifian Army regular.

110--'Abd a-Krim Haddu n Si Ziyan, of Ajdir, and 'Abd al-Krim's cousin (and therefore a member of the lineage of Aith Zar'a), was the latter's qa'id al-mishwar (a term which might be translated as "privy counselor"). He took over all of Raisuli's money, after the latter was jailed in Thamasind early in 1925, and handed it over to 'Abd al-Krim.

111--Of this document, we have only the Spanish translation; there is no photocopy of the Arabic original in La Ley Rifeña.

[226] [184] 112--There is, in actual fact, very little fishing among the Aith Waryaghar, who possess only a very small strip of beach where the Plain of Alhucemas meets the sea, at Swani. The Ibuqquyen and Thimsaman, their neighbors to the west and east respectively, are more active fishermen.

113--The agharrabu is the standard Rifian fishing-boat. Made of pine-wood and caulked with tar, it measures 6 m. x 2 m. x 1 m., and in 1954, cost about 7000-8000 pesetas. It is a rowboat, with oarlocks beside each of its three or four benches such that if one bench has an oarlock on its right side, the one in front of it or behind it will have one on the left side, etc. Oars measure 3 m. in length. Coon (op. cit., 1931, p. 43) speaks of the existence of sailboats on the Mediterranean coast of Morocco, but says they are less common than the agharrabu described

000 118--Malaria, of the "paludism" variety, was a considerable problem in the Rif of 1939, of which Blanco writes. In 1952-53, however, the Spanish administration conducted a vigorous DDT campaign, which made considerable strides in stamping out this disease.

119--Twiza is also often translated as "corvee". In Rifian, the word is dhiwiza, pl. dhiwizawin.

120--Any individual who failed to show up to take part in a twiza organized for repairing a ditch (of which he was--or is--one of the users) had to pay a fine ranging from about three to five duros. This fine, however, was not and is not paid to the aquwwam, but is levied as r-haqq by the jma'th in question, whose members buy and consume tea and sugar with the proceeds.

121--Irrigation turns, after the lots have been drawn to establish the order in which they occur, continue in the same order until something happens to the ditch, i.e. if it is washed out by a storm or if it loses water completely; and then lots are drawn again.

122--In 1953, the Granja Agricola had two days out of an eight day irrigation turn cycle, from the Dharga Hadhidha, on the left bank of the Nkur River. The other six days, the following lineages irrigated from the same ditch: Bu Srama (Izakiren, in the Aith Bu 'Ayyash), Ixatshumen n Waddai (Isrihan, in the Aith Yusif w 'Ari), Ihaddjiyen (Izakiren, in the Aith Bu 'Ayyash), r-'Aramth (affiliation unknown), Aith 'Alla (Imhawren, in the Aith 'Ari) and Aith Bu Minqadh (a "foreign element", supposedly from the Sus, in the Aith r-'Abbas subclan of the Aith 'Ari).

123--An akhammas is a poor sharecropper who receives one-fifth of the grain harvest of a richer individual with whom he has an annual verbal contract.

124--Blanco handles in a most able manner the whole question of the relationship of irrigation turns to lineage structure. Although by no means 100% accurate in all instances, his equation of the usage of secondary ditches by dharfiqin and of the smaller tertiary branches by the ijujga, or lineage branches, is certainly correct enough and widespread enough, in the Plain of al-Husaima in particular (where the distribution of irrigation turns is a very complicated affair), to be taken as a rule of thumb.

125--This seems a strange remark, particularly because it is italicized; as only plowing and sowing takes place in winter in the Rif, while the harvest is taken in mid-summer. However, it is possibly intended in irony, to show the poverty of the region.

126--Blanco refers here, in somewhat poetic and rhapsodic fashion, to the great topographical difference between the arid mountains along the upper course of the Ghis and the fertile alluvial Plain of al-Husaima which characterizes much of its lower course.

127--This number may have been 55 in 1939; it was certainly much higher in 1961.

128--Blanco mistranslates l-Bzimma, and, by extension, al-Masimma, as "the renowned".

000
[614] consideration here) are affiliated with the Ajdir segment of the subclan of the Aith Ughir Iyizan.

[614] 137--All three lineages are member groups of the subclan of the Tigarth in the clan of the Aith 'Ari.

312 591 613 114 138--Our own notes on the division of irrigation water from Dharga n-Bulma'iz are a little at variance with those of Blanco. There are three turns of 24 hours each, for the secondary ditches of Dhifirasin, r-Ghis Burma'iz and Thafadhna n Dara (Upper Dhafadhna). The Dhifirasin turn is distributed among the lineages of the Ibukriwen, Ihanjiqen (both of Aith Mhand u Yihya of the Plain) and Im'aruwen (this is exactly as Blanco indicates); but the Ghis Burma'iz turn is limited only to the three lineages of the Imhawren, i.e. the Aith 'Aru Hmid, Aith 'Abdallah u Hmid and Aith Muhand u Hmid. The Tafadhna n Dara turn is divided between the lineage of the Yinn Si 'Amar (branches of Dharwa nd-Hajj 'Amar and Dharwa nd-Hajj Muhand) of Lower Imrabdhen, clan of the Imrabdhen; and the Aith Bu Dhimmus (Dharwa n Muhammadi 'Allush); and this is very much at variance with what Blanco says. It is possible, but unlikely, that a change in order may have taken place after the Spanish administration put cement bases in the three principal ditches (r-Bzimma, Bulma'iz and Dthafadhna) in the Lower Ghis; and the cementing occurred long after Blanco left the Rif. It is easier (and probably more plausible) to attribute the discrepancy to ambiguity among informants; but here again, the pitfall of using ambiguity as a scapegoat is that even the least intelligent users of any ditch are always thoroughly conversant with which lineages use it, how much time and how long the cycle is, and in what order it comes. For it is standard irrigation practice in the Plain of al-Husaima that each dharfiqth receives water for 24 hours at a stretch, and that after this, the supply is cut off so that other dharfiqin can irrigate.

000
[114] 139--Blanco is in error here for not being familiar with the segmentary
[614] minutiae of the Aith Waryaghar. The Aith Bu Dhimmus lineage does not belong at all to the dharfiqth of the Imhawren, whose clan affiliations are with the Aith 'Ari, but to that of the Aith Yikhrif w 'Amar in the subclan of the Isrihan, of the Aith Yusif w 'Ari.

[114] 140--Our own fieldnotes on the subject say nothing of the staggered, around-the-clock rotation every twelve days of the Aith Bu Dhimmus after their insertion into the routine of the Imhawren turn; but we think we are at fault here for not having gone into the matter thoroughly enough. Blanco is indeed to be congratulated here not only on a truly original discovery, but on an excellent exposition of his material as well.

141--This statement proves that in Blanco's time the three principal ditches emanating from the Lower Ghis had not yet been cemented.

142--Only the lineage of the Dharwa n Hammu Taqar'aith is of the Imhawren subclan of the Aith 'Ari; all the rest of the individuals and lineages mentioned here are resident in Ajdir of the Aith Ughir Izan subclan of the Aith Yusif w 'Ari.

143--Our own notes on the distribution of water from the Tafadhna ditch, while not as detailed as those of Blanco, are nonetheless largely in accord with his. The ditch has a three-day cycle: Imhawren (24 hours),

000 with the lineages of the Aith 'Aru Hmid, Aith 'Abdallah u Hmid and Aith Muhand u Hmid irrigating; Aith Bu Dhimmus (24 hours) with the Dharwa n Muhammadi 'Allush irrigating; and Yinn Si 'Amar Umrabit (24 hours).

[114] 144--Blanco gives the "9 hours 20 minutes" figure (the difference between 12 hours and 2 hours 40 minutes) as "h. 60", which seems to make no sense whatsoever, and may be simply a typographical error.

[103] 145--Our notes record this as one ditch, called Sidd Tuth r-Hammam ("mulberry in the heat"?), a lower extension, in fact, of Sidd Dharga nd-Bzimma. It has a two-day turn, distributed as follows: U Kammuni, U r-Qadhi, U 'Amar u Bukar, U Muhand and Zawith. As in the l-Bzimma ditch, these names are purely names of turns, and not names of actual lineages located in the area around the ditch. However, at least three of the turn names recall present lineage segments of the clan of the Imrabdhen: U Kammuni and U r-Qadhi recall the Aith Kammun and Aith r-Qadhi in the Upper Imrabdhen, and U 'Amar u Bukar recalls the Aith 'Amar u Bukar in the Lower Imrabdhen. Given this fact, it is also possible, therefore, that Zawith in this context might refer either to the Zawith n Sidi Yusif in the Lower Imrabdhen or to the Zawith n Sidi 'Aisa or Zawith n Sidi 'Abd r-Qadar in the Upper Imrabdhen. The turn name U Muhand is too generalized to provide any lead.

146--Blanco unfortunately does not provide us with a translation of this document.

147--'Azib, in an Arabic dictionary, is generally given the meaning of "estate", but it is one of many words in Arabic which mean different things to different groups of people. In the Central Atlas, it refers to a shepherd's shelter in a summer pasturage area; and in the Rif it refers to a second house built by an individual who already owns one, preferably a second house in which he spends a certain season of the year, such as summer. Such an individual is called a'azzab, pl. i'azzaben, and there are very few of them in the Central Rif, where transhumance, in any form, is non-existent.

148--The tribes in question which are bounded by the Lower Nkur are the Aith Waryaghar on the west bank and the Thimsaman on the east; but it should also be remembered that the Middle and even a part of the Upper Nkur divides the Aith Waryaghar (west) from the Axt Tuzin (east).

[121] [613] [614] 149--The latter is a lineage-community of the Aith r-'Abbas subclan of the Aith 'Ari, while the former (Imzuren) is a thoroughly mixed local community, with elements of the Aith 'Ari, Aith Yusif w 'Ari Imrabdhen and even the Aith Bu 'Ayyash clans all included.

[113] 150--Our notes on Dharga n Dahar state that it has nine turns: five for the Aith Bu 'Ayyash (by which, naturally, is meant only those lineage segments of this clan localized around the area of the ditch), and the remaining four as follows: Abyadh (the Aith Mhand u Yihya of the Isrihan of the Aith Yusif w 'Ari), Thasrand Imziren (half for the Aith Bu 'Ayyash and half for the Aith Musa w 'Amar), Ihaddushen (a branch of the Aith Musa w 'Amar) and Imzuren. In each one of these turns, there are 7 or 8 nubath. From Thasrand Imziren to the Nkur, the Aith Bu 'Ayyash irrigate; and from Ihaddushen to Imzuren, the Aith 'Ari do so.

151--The third-mentioned individual was from the Aith Bu Qiyadhen lineage of the Aith 'Adhiya subclan of the Aith Bu 'Ayyash, and the fourth from Ajdir of the Aith Yusif w 'Ari. The others were unidentified.

312 591 613 614

152--Sidd r-Hajib irrigates the Aith Musa W. 'Amar and Iswiqen n Waddai (affiliated with the Aith r-'Abbas subclan of the Aith 'Ari), for the most part. Sidd Inufan irrigates the territory of the same lineages, as well as the land of a few intrusive families of Shurfa Wazzaniyin from Snada (Aith Yittuft), those of Sidi l-Hajj Mikki and Sidi Brahim. Sidd Bu Kra' irrigates up through Imjjudhen (of the Imhawren subclan of the Aith 'Ari), as well as r-Mruj and Ahamri (the site of the Granja). Sidd Ahammar irrigates land bought by the Hajj Hmid n 'Abdssram Bu 'Ayyashi, the son of 'Abdssram nj-Hajj Muhand Bu Qiyadhen mentioned in note 151; and it irrigates land of the Ihankuren lineage (in Aith Musa w 'Amar) as well. Sidd Miskur irrigates Ifthisen (Aith Musa w 'Amar) and the Ifqiren (Aith 'Amar u Bukar of the Lower Imrabdhen).

153--These ditches are presumably named for the lineages which use them: Tigarth and I'abbuthen (both of the Tigarth subclan) in the Aith 'Ari, and Aith Misa'ud in the Lower Imrabdhen.

154--Sidd Tagharbund irrigates for the Ihankuren (of Aith Musa w 'Amar of the Aith r-'Abbas subclan of the Aith 'Ari), Imjjudhen (of the Imhawren subclan of the Aith 'Ari), certain lineages of Bu Minqad (again of the Aith r-'Abbas of the Aith 'Ari), the (Lower) Imrabdhen of r-'Azih Imzuren, and, in 1953, for the then Pasha of Villa Sanjurjo (al-Husaima), Mikki n Sriman r-Khattabi, of Ajdir. Sidd 'Abdallah irrigates for the Ifqiren lineage (of Aith 'Amar u Bukar of the Lower Imrabdhen subclan) at r-'Azib Imzuren, Sidd Arbib ("dam of the step-child") irrigates for the Ifqiren and Ma'iza lineages (also of Aith 'Amar u Bukar) at r-'Azib Imzuren. Sidd Ishtari irrigates for the Imrabdhen of r-'Azib Imzuren, and for the Imhawren, Aith Musa w 'Amar and Bu Minqadh lineages (the last three of the Aith 'Ari).

155--As indicated, the Imhawren are a subclan of the Aith 'Ari, while the Aith Mhand u Yihya are a lineage of the Isrihan subclan of the clan of the Aith Yusif w 'Ari.

156--For whom, presumably, the ditch was named in the first place, as those of its members who are nearest it share a turn from its water.

[613] [591]

157--Our notes state that the Dharga n Tmsaman always has a right to one-third of the water from Dharga Ughzar Amzzyan; and that there are four, rather than three, turns of 24 hours each, the fourth being that of the Aith 'Amar u Bukar (Lower Imrabdhen) of Ma'iza.

[613] [614]

158--A lineage of Izakiren community in the subclan of the "True" Aith Bu 'Ayyash, clan of the Aith Bu 'Ayyash.

159--Sidd Jdid is used in summer, when water is scarce, by the same lineages who use Dharga n Tmsaman.

160--This document is not given by Blanco in translation.

776 778 161--Sidi r-Hajj Yusif n S'aid Ikhrif lived in Imnudh (Aith 'Adhiya, of the Aith Bu 'Ayyash) and is buried there, in a tomb surmounted by a white cupola, on the left bank of the Nkur. He is not one of the Imrabdhen of the Aith Waryaghar, but has descendants in Imnudh, in the Thimsaman and in the Axt Tuzin. In the clan of the Axt 'Akki in the last-mentioned tribe is buried his son Sidi r-Mdur, who gave protection to the tulba when they gathered at his tomb to read verses from the Koran. It is said that there was a time in which they stopped praying, and since then he has not afforded them his protection. Sidi r-Hajj Yusif has the reputation of being able to cure sick people and to cure barrenness in women. He is visited on Thursdays, and sacrifices are made at his tomb.

000 162--These figures date from 1938, at the time of Blanco's survey.

[793] 163--The legend behind Azru n Srith is as follows: once a wedding was going on in the neighborhood of Thanda Hawa (which functioned as a gate and grain-silo deposit for the City of Nakur). A foreign saint, Sidi Birqi, who came from the east and who is now buried on the east bank of the Nkur River, in the Axt Tuzin, came up to the wedding procession to ask the people for a little water in order to perform his ablutions prior to prayer. He was brusquely refused, and because of this, he turned all the members of the procession, including the bride on her mule, into stone. To this day, Rifians say that the rock of Azru n Srith looks like a bride mounted on a mule--and hence its name.

[613] 164--The following groups irrigate from Sidd Ysiyar: Aith Bu Srama of Izakiren ("True" Aith Bu 'Ayyash, Aith Bu 'Ayyash), Ighmiren (Aith 'Adhiya, Aith Bu 'Ayyash), Ixatshumen (Isrihan, Aith Yusif w 'Ari), Axt Tuzin, and Imrabdhen n Bu Zwiqa, Aith Habbuqush and Aith Tbirkhashth (all of Truguth, Thimsaman).

[613] [614] 165--Izakiren is a lineage of the subclan of the "True" Aith Bu 'Ayyash of the clan of Aith Bu 'Ayyash, and Ighmiren is a lineage of the subclan of the Aith 'Adhiya of the clan of the Aith Bu 'Ayyash. Our notes read that there are eight turns, rather than seven, for Dharga n Tufrasht, but these, beyond reading Izakiren and Ighmiren, are unspecified.

[613] [614] 166--Dharga 'Arridh irrigates for Imrabdhen n Bu Zwiqa (clan of Truguth, of the Thimsaman) and Aith Bu Srama (lineage of Izakiren, subclan of the "True" Aith Bu 'Ayyash, clan of Aith Bu 'Ayyash).

[614] 167--In the clan of Truguth in the Thimsaman.

168--All of Izakiren in the Aith Bu 'Ayyash.

[613] 169--Our notes state that the water of Bujinn is restricted to lineages of Truguth, in the Thimsaman: Imrabdhen n Bu Zwiqa, Ims'audhen, Aith Habbuqush, Dharwa nj-Qa'id 'Allal.

[614] 170--All of the clan of Truguth, Thimsaman. Our notes read, in addition, that Dharga Iznagen irrigates some land in the Thimsaman which belongs to 'Abd al-Krim.

104 624 171--It might be noted here that the aquwwam is functionary, corresponding more or less with the Arabic shaikh al-filaha, who was introduced

104 624 [686] by the Spaniards. If anyone fails to turn up to repair a ditch after a storm, the fine he pays goes not to the aquwwam but to his jma'th, who buy sugar and tea with it.

000 172--"Subclans" may not be strictly accurate here as a translation, but it is better than Blanco's "fractions". Ajdir is, as aforementioned, a community of the subclan of the Aith Ughir Izan of the Aith Yusif w 'Ari, while the Imhawren are a subclan, in their own right, of the Aith 'Ari. The Imrabdhen are an entire clan, but in this instance only those subclansmen of the Lower Imrabdhen contiguous to the Imhawren and Ajdir were involved.

[613] 173--The references are to the lineage of the Aith 'Aru Hmid, subclan of the Imhawren, clan of the Aith 'Ari.

174--The Sultan of Morocco at this time was Mawlay 'Abd ar-Rahman ibn Hisham (1822-1859).

175--It is impossible for us to infer today even the clans to which the first three men belonged, much less their lineages, because of the antiquity of the qanun (or, in this case, shahada) in question. However, Muhammad al-'Arusi was probably of the Aith 'Arus or a descendant of someone who had escaped from a feud in that mountain subclan, and 'Abdallah b. Ahmad Amhawil must have been of the Imhawren subclan of the Aith 'Ari.

[554] [648] [631] 176--Sriman r-Khattabi of Ajdir, whom the Spaniards made the top qa'id of all the Aith Waryaghar in 1926. He held this position until 1934-35, when, at Blanco's instigation, Waryagharland was divided into three qaidates of equal size. In 1936 he became Pasha of Villa Sanjurjo (al-Husaima), a position he held until his death in 1950.

[614] 177--Of the clan of the Aith 'Abdallah, but lineage affiliation is unspecified.

178--Both the qadi and the two 'adul can be identified as being of the clan of the Aith Yusif w 'Ari.

[224] [113] 179--In Moroccan Arabic, rayah or siyada are the usual terms for "hunting"; in Rifian, however, the word is dhingmarth, while hunter is angmar, pl. ingmarn. A very summary description of Rifian hunting techniques, as practiced for the most part in the Igzinnayen, and with rifle, net or trap, is in Coon, op. cit., 1931, pp. 37-38; and a summary of Blanco's own data is also contained in R. P. Esteban Ibanez, "El Derecho Consuetudinario en la Sociedad Bereber", Institut International de Sociologie, XVIIIe Congrès, Nuremberg 1958, Sept. 16-17, 1958 (mimeographed).

180--This is not literally true, for like all Moroccan Muslims, Rifians are extremely fond of mutton (or even goat) tajins, or olive-oil based vegetable stews.

181--The distribution of the meat of a dead (or sacrificed) animal is called r-uzi'ath (Ar. l-wuzi'a), and every member of the jma'th is entitled to his share.

224 619 689 114 182--According to informants in the Jbil of the Aith Waryaghar, this was not, and is not so. Hunting is neither obligatory, nor are there fixed days for it; people hunt entirely when they wish to do so, although nobody would think of doing so on Wednesday (market day) or Friday.

224 671 [114] [178] We wonder, too, if the Rifian hunting qanuns are in fact as detailed and as complex as Blanco would have us believe. Hunting is certainly less common now than it was, for instance, during the "Ripublik", and possibly the general knowledge of many of the fine points which Blanco has recorded has died in the interim. It is also possible that these same fine points may be in fact an indication of the relative lack of game in the Rif; that because the human population is relatively high and the animal population relatively low, provision must be made to establish priority rights of particular individuals to game, under any circumstances. Hunting regulations, as Blanco describes them for the Rif, are far more elaborate than they appear to be in the Central Atlas, where game (and large game, such as Barbary sheep, panthers and boar) is plentiful and where hunting is generally done with a bu shfar, the flintlock gun. There, the general rule of thumb is that anyone who hears a shot fired comes running, as any person present at a kill has the right to share the meat with the hunter (i.e. if the animal in question is not Koranically tabooed). In the Rif, game is small (jackals and boar are the largest animals, and both are getting progressively rarer) and not overly numerous, and people are many; hence the elaboration of these hunting qanuns. (Boar are of course not eaten, given the Muslim taboo on pig.)

000 183--This word we have been unable to find in the Jbil of the Aith Waryaghar, in which area hunters, collectively, are called ingmarn (sing. angmar), and where no one can really be termed a "hunt leader".

184--This term, as frequently shouted during a hunt as haw-haw-haw!, the hunting call proper, means "Here it is!" or "There it goes!" and is in fact the Rifian classificatory cousin to the English or Virginian fox-hunter's "Tally-Ho!"

[114] 185--Given mistakenly by Blanco as Aith 'Amar u Yahya.

224 628 613 614 186--In several communities of the clan of the Aith Hadhifa there are lineages of the Upper Imrabdhen (Rashkra, Zawith n Sidi 'Abd r-Qadar and Kammun), while one community (Dhamarkat) contains Lower Imrabdhen lineages.

However, the disposition of these two hunting bands does not appear to coincide with that of the two subclans of the Aith Hadhifa; for while in the first band, Ihadduthen, Mishkur and most of Bihban belong to the subclan of the Aith Bu Jdad (Aith Bujdat), Thizimmurin and Iharunen belong to that of the Iraqraqen; and while, in the second band, Aith 'Amar u S'aid and Bashkra both belong to Iraqraqen, the Imrabdhen are of course intrusive. It is, thus, far more likely and, indeed, a far more logical assumption, that the hunting-band organization described by Blanco follows territorial lines rather than purely segmentary ones; and proof of this can be ascertained from a glance at Blanco's tribal map of Aith Waryaghar in the appendix.

A, [No appendix is given--Analyst]

175 The social facts are, however, somewhat clearer. The 648 Berber tribes of the Central Rif were a part of the bled-as-siba,
651 or that area in which the central Moroccan government (bled-al-makhzen) failed to exercise effective control. The boundary between the one and the other was determined by whether within the area in question the makhzen could or could not collect taxes. If a tribe had voluntarily or involuntarily submitted to the payment of tribute, there would be a royal intermediary, a qaid, to collect revenue. In the Rif such dominancy was not present until the Spanish, or in the case of the Igzinnayen, the French, were able to assert supremacy.

619 A complimentary feature of the bled-as-siba, at least as
(648) it obtained in the Central Rif, was that not only were the tribes independent of the makhzen but within any particular tribe itself, the internal segments of which it consisted were independent in most instances from one another. There was no tradition of centralization in this region. Each tribe (taqbitch) was divided into segments of varying degrees of inclusiveness. The maximal
619 lineages or ar-rba agreed that they belonged to a common social
613 group which was socially, geographically, and to some extent linguistically distinct from other taqbitch. This social entity was evoked more in terms of space than of time. If one lived within the spacial limits of the tribe one was a member of that group. However, rights and duties within the taqbitch were nebulous and a Riffian would only use his tribal identity to someone who was unacquainted with local political sub-divisions. As a

619 temporal entity the tribe was only rarely a corporate group as in
613 times of invasion. Even on these occasions tribal-wide support was difficult to solidify since each lineage spokesman had the option of joining in or staying out. In a land where personal and familial enmity was so intense, it was not uncommon for a tribal segment to remain neutral or migrate away, temporarily or permanently, to avoid making common cause with tribal affiliates who might murder them. There were even occasions in which tribal segments allied themselves with an enemy tribe.

619 The social division which had a more frequent jural function was the ar-rba, the group which Coon designates as a 'canton.' The term itself comes from the Arabic and Berber word for the number four. The epistemology of the term is obscure. Some tribes, such as the Igzinnayen and Beni Wariyaghar, contain four of these subdivisions. Others, such as Thimsaman, contain two, and some taqbitch, such as Ibuqquyen and Tafarsith, are not divided into ar-rba at all. In these tribes the term for taqbitch and for ar-rba are used to designate the same set of people. The ar-rba contained both related families and strangers who had purchased land within the territorial limits of the ar-rba. Spacial proximity rather than kinship seems to have been the organizing principle. In tribes covering vast amounts of territory the ar-rba was a territorial division to meet whatever jural responsibilities which occurred within its limits. The smaller the number of tribesmen and of spacial expanse, the less necessary it was to have these subdivisions. Within the ar-rba

Within the ar-rba
619 there was a council (jemas) held irregularly to discuss and [628] settle judicial matters generally pertaining to the blood feud.
[554] Only the more important families within the ar-rba had representation on the council.

613 The first social unit which is directly reflective of kin ties is the dharfiqth. Whereas tribal and ar-rba names refer to place names generally, the dharfiqth invariably carries the name of a real person, i.e. Aith 'Abdallah or Aith al-Qasim. The members of this group consider that they have a common agnate although they may not be able to demonstrate the genealogical linkage to this ancestor. The group theoretically includes all the sons of the founding ancestor and their offspring. Some dharfiquin seem to have increased in number and power while others grew smaller either through decimation in feuds or from splintering into rival dharfiquin. Solidarity seems to have rested mainly on sentiment, and in such an explosive atmosphere this is perhaps too fragile a mechanism for maintaining agnatic descent groups.

613 The dharfiqth is made up of a varying number of jujgu
596 which are localized patrilineal extended families which may be regarded as minimal lineages. Each ijujga consists of a man, his wife or wives, his married sons and their wives and children, along with his unmarried sons and daughters. When the referent of the ijujga dies, all his sons form separate and new jujgu. The composition of the ijujga is today an idealization since few
000 households contain the above list of relatives. Neolocality is

591 Neolocality is
178 the preferred residence pattern today and matrilocality is permitted.

613 The rights and duties of these descent groups are rather 596 more fluid than is generally reported for African societies. As 602 I shall discuss in Chapter 5, the principle of patrimony does not
571 rule out other types of kinship alignment nor are kin ties the only form of relationship. Each community is made up of both kinsmen and non-kin with relations based on economic association, friendship or communal obligations.

178 In the Rif today the jural authority of the upper levels of segmentation[1] has been superseded by bureaucratic organization.
[613] However, in the lower rungs such as the dharfiqth and ijuiga
[596] traditional social obligations are still extant.
[602] The final social unit in the Rif is the local community
621 or dchar, a neighborhood association both both kinsmen and non-kin (called douar in other Berber areas). The size of such a community varies considerably. If we take the tribe of Ibuqquyen
621 we find that it is divided into three fractions. In a survey I
619 took in 1966, the fraction of Tagidit had 14 dchars, the largest 162 having a population of 707 persons living in 114 different homesteads, while the smallest consisted of 94 persons living in 47 households. In the fraction of Axgar, the largest was 607 people living in 107 homes and the smallest was 163 people in 34 homes. In Izmourin, the most populous of the three fractions, the largest dchar had 1,509 people living in 268 homes and the smallest had 228 living in 35 homes.

1. [i.e., the ar-rba or tribal levels--Analyst]

582 Within any one dharfiqth
(613) there are both endogamous and exogamous marriage. The same holds
582 true for the fraction although endogamy at this structural level
619 is probably more pronounced. There is no prohibition against marriage into other tribes and such marriage seems more a function of proximity than any cultural rule. There is more tribal exogamy between Ait Kamara in the Beni Wariyaghar and Izmourin in Ibuqquyen or Arba Turirt in Beni Wariyaghar and Igzinnayen than 565 for the respective tribes as a whole. Proximity tends to be less 582 important among the notables who have a smaller pool of prospects from which to draw.

582 The main structural consequence of the absence of pro-
602 scriptive rules is that there is no common genealogical unity
611 at any level of social organization beyond the extended family. Since recruitment into the descent group does not follow any single principle, there is a weakening of the patrilineal prin-
611 ciple. Although rights in property and children almost always 602 remain in the patrilineal line, the organization of the society is not exclusively or even preponderantly based on this principle. A man's matrilineal relatives (who may with cousin marriage also be related through patrilineal lines), as well as non-related friends, neighbors, and patrons, may receive equal or greater emphasis. A further weakening of the patrilineal principle was

582 of such marriages does not appear to be high. It might be more
114 correct to state that FaBrDa marriage is neither a preferred nor a completely approved union. As one young man expressed to me
(829) with disgust: "It's a custom of the Arabs. But it is wrong. It's like marrying your sister." The comment was made as we prepared to attend exactly such a union.

121 631 XI. The Riffian anarchy. -- We have spoken of the state of political dissolution in which the tribes of the western Rif live, in particular the ones whose territory borders the sea between the Ouringa wadi and the Ighzer Moqorn, to the point that the tribal fractions themselves appear to be no more than a dust of rival and hostile families; thus one will not expect to find in the mountains that border the Mediterranean an organization comparable to that of the South of Morocco. In this region, where 121 the houses are scattered, established on the summit of each hill, 361 and form as many separate little fortresses, the customary units, 621 such as the hamlet, the "mouda^{c}," even the khoms, have limits 632 difficult to discern. The "mouda^{c}" is still extant, thanks to the [619] existence of a Friday mosque common to a large number of households, and in trying to establish the list of the households that co-operate in the maintenance of the taleb, one succeeds in finding again in the general tangle of families this small elementary group that exists in the most anarchical regions. At times, when the houses approach one another in order to form a sort of village spread out over a /239/ hilltop of two or three kilometers, amidst gardens and Barbary fig trees, the social bond 621 grows a little tighter again. The familial group to which we •613 have given the name of "ikhs" in the Sous is designated here by "tarfiq" (1);

1. Perhaps from the Arabic "refaqa," group of persons, unless it is a deformation of "ferqa," division.

621 613 614 114 It seems that it might be permissible to give the name of "clan" to the "tarfiq" of the Beni Ouriaghel. This is a familial group more numerous and more lasting than the "ikhs" of the Haut-Atlas and at the same time a sort of political unit. Doutté gives, wrongly according [171] to us, the name of "clan" to the ensemble of families that constitute a jema^{c}a in the North /footnote 1 continued/ of the Haha ("Organisation sociale et domestique des Haha /Social and Domestic Organization of the Haha/," pp. 10-11. Now there is an association of "ikhs" of diverse origins there. On the other hand, the bond of blood exists among the households of the same Riffian jemaᶜa.

it includes about ten houses -- 30 to 40 hearths in all -- and becomes a group strong enough to defend itself. The "tarfiq" heads, willingly set off by the title of "amghar," are feared and respected because they can then assemble 40 or 50 "brothers" resolute for anything. For the most insignificant motive they take up arms and engage in bloody battles with the neighboring hamlets for long years. These are then veritable wars of extermination, which end only in the disappearance or exile of the vanquished. The following example, selected in the fraction of the Aït ᶜAbdallah, of the tribe of the Beni Ouriaghel, favorite country for soff struggles, will give the measure of the violence of these rivalries capable of breaking most of the social ties.

Discord broke out not long ago between two villages, each peopled by a "tarfiq," the Aït Qasem and the Ibouneharen, following the killing of a dog that belonged to the guest of an amghar. When the Aït Qasem refused to pay the blood price of the dog, namely 50 douros, claimed by the amghar, it came to blows and to war. Twelve men were killed the first day. In the following years 40 men died on one side, 62 on the other, in regular combat, not counting those who were assassinated for vengeance. Finally, the defeated party decided to leave the [722] country. Old men were then seen to take refuge with the women and children in the sacred mountain of the Zerhoun, after having sold their goods in order to be able, in one last effort, to buy a murderer who would avenge their dead. The conditions under [435] which this last was to make the designated enemy disappear were carefully detailed and the stipulations passed before the ᶜadoul; if the shot killed the adversary, the recompense was /240/ 10,000

628 reals: 5,000 if it only wounded him; if the bullet missed its •613 goal, 2,500. The marksman, however, fortunate or awkward,
726 perished the next day, struck perhaps by a child hidden with a
[435] gun in a thicket of lentiscus.

It is understandable that under these conditions the notion of 613 "khoms" is often obscure; the only group that can exist then is 619 the family, around which assemble by bonds of adoption and marriage the weakest groups and the outsiders so as to form the "tarfiq."

613 Discords sometimes become so violent that material life
628 frequently stops; only the women then dare to go out into the fields; the men come to pray at the mosque without abandoning 613 their guns. In these circumstances, the family heads of the 628 whole country gather together in order to decide on a "ribat,"
675 which is respected for several months. This name is given to a solemn agreement that binds all the members of the neighboring tribes to repress, by means of very high fines, murders, rapes, large thefts, aggressions at the markets or on the roads leading to [681] them. The sums paid by the guilty, which can climb to several thousand douros, are divided among the contracting tribes. The "amghars," heads of the most powerful families, have only the small personal part that goes to them just as to mere individuals.

628 Among the less turbulent tribes of the Rif, as at Targist, at 184 Zerqet, among the Beni Gmil, private wars have not reached as 621 great a development since the inhabitants still succeed in living grouped in hamlets. The "mouda[6]" or subfractions and even the 632 "khoms" sometimes summon all the warriors in order to delibe-
621 rate common affairs. This meeting, to which each one comes 613 armed, takes the name "agrao" as in the Haut-Atlas /High Atlas/ and the Moyen-Atlas /Middle Atlas/. Sometimes the chiefs of [681] each of the important families put at the head of the khoms an
[671] amghar whose role is to see to the application of the customary law, to have the fines, or "insaf," paid, with which crimes are punished according to rules known by all, but not written. Like [652] the moqaddem in the western Atlas, this amghar collects one third of the "insaf"; the other two parts go to the tribe.
